My Books Awaiting the Government's Attention,

Two Words

The book "Swachh Bharat" was inspired by the movement started by Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi ji, but due to a busy schedule, this book remained in a file even after its completion. By August 2025, I had written 260 books, which have been published from time to time. Now, the time has come, according to the orders of the Guru Sahib, that an attempt will be made to deliver "Swachh Bharat" to Shri Modi Sahib ji.

"Swachh Bharat" means to make India clean and beautiful. India is an ancient country, and it is the land of those rishis, munis, saints, gurus, great men, warriors, and compassionate people who tried to make Hindustan healthy by walking on the path of truth. This is the reason why millions of people from foreign countries aspire to come here to bow down to and see its sacred land. Some who come even forget about returning and settle here.

From time to time, the administration makes full efforts to make the country clean, hoping that India will be among the cleanest countries in the world. However, due to ignorance, some people in the country become obstacles. It's no small matter; the country is large, and great effort is needed to keep it completely clean. But unless there is a special push, this work will not be accomplished. This is a very auspicious task, and the country needs to remain clean.

Many countries in Europe and abroad are very clean; you don't see garbage or litter anywhere. In my country, Holland, I saw in 1977-78 that not even a piece of paper, dirt, or anything of the sort was visible. But ever since foreigners started coming here in large numbers, they have only made the country dirtier. Spitting while walking, blowing their nose, throwing cigarettes, discarding packets after eating and drinking, throwing household waste, urinating, etc., they break the rules and spoil the country's cleanliness. More than 90% of the people here love cleanliness, while 10% continue to spread filth.

For every person, their country is more precious than their own body. It is very important to understand this sentiment; only then can countries remain clean. "Keep yourself clean and keep your country clean" is the principle of my country, Holland. I appeal with folded hands to the residents of my motherland, India, to keep our country and the world clean. This will be a matter of great joy. This work is possible, not impossible, but for this, it is very necessary to make rules. Many rules have been made, but due to people's ignorance, many don't even know what "Swachh" (clean) means and how to maintain it.

When Modi Sahib himself took a broom and started cleaning with many people from his cabinet, others should have felt ashamed that we should worry about our country's cleanliness every day, not just for one day, and make our country cleaner than all other countries in the world. Well, better late than never. Whenever the sun rises, its rays illuminate the earth. We should understand the work of cleaning India in the same way.

Why the Need to Write the Book?

I felt very good when PM Modi Sahib himself picked up a broom and took the initiative to clean the country. These are very good sentiments, and it is necessary to respect and uphold them. Some awareness did come, but the ignorant could not understand this movement. The movement is seen from time to time, but it needs to be carried out completely according to Modi Sahib's feelings.

People should be ashamed that the PM of the country is picking up a broom and cleaning. We can clean with a broom for two days with them, but the PM, busy with his other duties, cannot clean the country with you every day. We, too, after abandoning his noble thought, put away the brooms we had held for two days. What should have happened was that we should have continued the good work he set an example for, which would have made the PM proud of his countrymen for understanding their responsibility.

I have concluded from my heart that there is a need for a "Clean India" policy, but people's negative thinking did not take it seriously and strangled it, which has caused a loss to the country in terms of cleanliness. As I have written before about Europe and my country Holland, how clean it is, if there is any dirt, paper, cigarette butts, or food wrappers, it is thrown by foreigners. People from our Asian, African, and other countries consider it an insult to follow the rules. I have seen during my many years here that there are many rule-breakers, most of whom are foreigners.

I myself am a cleanliness-loving person. Let me tell you about my home's condition: you will not find any dust or dirt in any corner of my house. The bathroom itself is so clean that you cannot even imagine. Whenever I see something in the house that can be called dirt, I clean it myself to keep the house clean. Here, unlike in India, there are no servants in homes, and you have to do your own work. After coming here, many men do not consider it disrespectful to do household chores because it is their house where they live, so it is their duty to keep it clean.

When I go to India, I know the cleaning staff there. You must believe me, I cannot even eat from the utensils they have washed. That's why I cook my own food at home and wash my own utensils. On the very first day, I wash the bathroom, and during my four-week stay, I wash the bathroom about twice a week. This is how the house stays clean. I hope that you too will serve your homes and the country to make India clean. If you do so, you will be a good citizen of your country.

The Book is Also for the Whole World

I have written this book in the name of "Swachh Bharat" because I was very impressed by the Clean India campaign initiated by PM Modi Sahib. I also thought that India is my birthplace (Janam Bhumi) and Holland is my workplace (Karam Bhumi), where I am close to completing 50 years of my life. The land here has given me so much, which I might never have been able to achieve while living in India.

While studying in India, being a good sportsman, I had hoped for a big job, which Professor Janeja Sahib of the college had offered. He had previously helped three students reach very high positions, and they retired as very senior officers. My fate brought me to a foreign country, but I am still grateful to that professor who told me to complete one more class to pass my B.A., saying that getting me a job was his responsibility. I don't know where that professor is today; it has been a long time, and it is my fault that I could never meet him again. Besides, it is God's will; he has written everyone's destiny, who will go where to earn their livelihood.

I feel that India, Holland, and the entire world are my own, and I want the whole world to become beautiful, prosperous, and clean, moving forward by strengthening friendships with one another. "Nanak Naam Chardi Kala, Tere Bhane Sarbat Da Bhala" (In Nanak's name, may we be in high spirits, and by Your grace, may everyone prosper). A Sikh always wishes for the well-being of all and makes this request to the Almighty by praying twice every day.

Although I am writing this book addressing India, it is also very applicable to other countries of the world. If possible, the entire world needs to pay attention to this book. By the way, in the rich countries of the world, including America, Canada, England, Europe, Australia, New Zealand, and other beautiful nations, the people are cautious about cleanliness. Yet, so much has been written in this book that even the people there can benefit from it.

Another problem that arises is that, for example, the native people of Europe are very careful about cleanliness, but the foreigners who come here need to be careful and learn about it. I remember when we first came to Germany, my companion's shoelace was untied at the station. An old white lady was telling us that his shoelace was untied, but due to the language barrier, we finally understood and tied the lace. This incident has a very big meaning: it shows how serious these people are about cleanliness, rules, and making themselves and their country beautiful. What a wonderful thing this is. There is no expense involved; we should follow this as much as possible so that we are counted among clean people. This will also enhance our reputation as cleanliness-loving people.

Appeal for help through Books

I received the inspiration from the Eternal Being (Akaal Purkh) to write books. This grace cannot be bestowed upon everyone. I will remain grateful for this blessing all my life.

My first book was a novel, which I wrote at the age of 16-17, but it was impossible to publish it by taking money from my parents. The name of that novel was Kirt Karam Ke Vichhure (Separated by Deeds and Actions). I later came abroad, earned my own money, published that novel in 1986, and distributed it among my friends and loved ones.

After this, the work of writing began, and by 2025, I have written over 260 books. I credit the entire success to Sri Guru Granth Sahib Ji, as it is only through Their grace that I have been able to do this. The journey continues, and by the Guru's grace, the books are being praised or are proving beneficial for the welfare of the world.

Because of these books, the community (Sangat) in some countries has started to accept this servant (the author), and the work of receiving respect is also taking place. There are some books that I have thought about—that if I write them, they could do very auspicious work for the world—and I have already written some of these.

Of course, everyone praises their own writing, but it will only be considered good when a reader tells you that you have written something excellent. I pay attention to this fact. The journey of writing books is a very difficult one. I write in every book that you are taking on a very big responsibility in written form, and the world is watching you to see what you are doing.

The times are certainly difficult, and even when you do something very good during these times, people sometimes do not speak well or kindly about anyone. Some look upon the good with auspicious feelings, and some are jealous. Something like this happens to me on my path many times, but I also understand what is in the hearts of those people towards me. Sometimes, some people speak sweetly to your face, but inside, they are jealous of you, wondering how you have managed to write so many books. I have never given them much of a reply, but the things they say—the Eternal Being has given me enough knowledge to know that a person who has written over 260 books surely has enough intellect to understand the surrounding environment.

May Satguru Sahib bless everyone. I hope to keep writing, and the time to come will surely be more beautiful and knowledgeable than the previous books. The website for my books has been created, and you can see it in every book and read the books for free on the website. We will continue to upload new books there from time to time.

I request institutions and generous devotees/congregations that if you can offer any help in publishing these books, I will be very grateful.

A Glimpse into the Life of PM Modi Ji

The country has had various PMs at different times, but Sardar Manmohan Singh ji, Shri Atal Bihari Vajpayee ji, Shri Narendra Modi ji, and Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri ji are considered very good PMs of India.

Modi Sahib ji was born on September 17, 1950, in the village of Vadnagar, Mehsana district, Gujarat, to father Shri Damodar Das Mool Chand Modi and mother Smt. Heeraben Modi. He was the third of six siblings. His father ran a tea stall at the railway station, and Narendra ji was always there to help him. While earning a living here, he also learned to speak Hindi well, and his mother also worked hard to support the family.

He received his primary education from the village and was very brave from childhood. Once, he caught a crocodile from the village lake and brought it home, but his mother told him to release it, so he did. He was very fond of reading and would go to the library to read books and study history. At the age of eight, influenced by his teacher Chandrakant ji, he was drawn towards the RSS and was greatly inspired by Swami Vivekananda.

Influenced by the 1962 Sino-Indian War, he tried to join the army, but it was not to be. He also participated in the NCC in school. He was fond of wearing clean clothes. His marriage was arranged at the age of 13, and at 17, he was married to Jashodaben Chimanlal. During the 1965 war, when the train arrived at the station, he would provide tea and food to the soldiers. He was greatly inspired by patriotism, and in 1967, he left his family to seek spiritual knowledge and took the name "Ankit Jai," meaning one who has no home. He also went to the Swami Vivekananda Ashram and then, after a long journey, returned to Gujarat in 1969. But after a short time, he went to Ahmedabad to help his maternal uncle at his tea shop. He came in contact with the RSS, and after talking to a worker, Shri Vakil, he was drawn to it. He became a pracharak (propagator) and also got a high position. In this connection, he stayed in Delhi in 1975, came to Gujarat, and then graduated in 1980.

In 1987, he became the secretary of the BJP and grew close to Shri Atal Bihari Vajpayee. Then, from 2001 to 2014, he was the CM of Gujarat, and from 2014 onwards, he became the PM of India for the third consecutive time. During his tenure, he visited the maximum number of countries in the world, building good relations with other nations, which yielded positive results. He is highly respected in foreign countries and is the first PM of India to have enhanced relations with the maximum number of other countries. How beloved you are to India is proven by becoming PM for the third time, which is not an easy feat. May God bless you with health and happiness.

How the Swachh Bharat Mission Began

By initiating the Swachh Bharat campaign, Modi ji became even more popular. This is not just a message for India but for the entire world. It is an inspiration for every individual. For those who understand, a hint is enough, and becoming clean and improving oneself is a very good thing.

On October 2, 2014, the Swachh Bharat Abhiyan (Clean India Mission) was started by PM Modi ji and it became a national movement in every corner of India. The campaign was launched by PM Shri Narendra Modi ji himself at Rajpath in New Delhi, setting an example by holding a broom in his own hands and in the hands of government officials. According to him, the Swachh Bharat mission was also described as an effort to fulfill a dream of Mahatma Gandhi. He set a record by starting the cleaning campaign himself with a broom at the Mandir Marg police station, despite being the PM.

This movement became a public movement in India, but with time, it has slowed down. There is still ignorance among people about understanding their duties. Nevertheless, a lot of awareness has been created, and in the coming times, this mission can be seen in its full glory. At the beginning, the PM had invited nine people, and those nine people invited nine more.

Why was there a need to run a cleanliness campaign in India? It is due to the ignorance among the people. Even in their homes, people do not maintain cleanliness properly. I have made one request regarding this: this issue can be resolved when we create a policy and rules and explain them to the people. Making India clean is very essential. India is filled with the blessings of nature's beauty and bounties, and we need to understand them.

Just as political figures, film stars like Amitabh Bachchan, people related to TV, Sachin Tendulkar, and other players started the movement, there is a need to revive it again. It should be a continuous process. If you think that we will only act when Modi ji starts it, then that's not right. India is your country, and you should all become Modi ji, lead the country, and make it clean. Your name will be held high. Students, panchayats, social workers, and the media should take serious steps in this direction, and success will be at your feet.

People should not wait for Modi ji to start, for him to pick up a broom, or for ministers, MLAs, and MPs to sweep before they act. They have many other jobs to do. Let them handle their work, and you yourselves, in your villages and cities, can become Modi ji by giving as much time as you can. Your country will become a special and clean nation in the world. I hope that you will take this campaign forward with seriousness for your country. We all need noble thoughts; only then can we make the world clean, truthful, and loving. May God be merciful; there are high hopes for success, but knowledge can make everything clean.

Garbage and Waste

Our body is the most important thing for us, and we must keep it clean and pure. Being dirty is not admirable in any way. No one wants to talk to, meet, hug, eat or drink with, share utensils with, shake hands with, share a bed with, use the clothes of, or sit in a car with dirty people. On the contrary, no one refuses to respect and meet people who stay clean.

Everyone turns up their nose upon entering a dirty house. The same goes for countries. Why do people call European countries a paradise? First and foremost, they have the honor of being clean. On the other hand, when we talk about poor countries, the airports are clean, but when we go outside, if the surroundings are not clean, it leaves a stain.

In Europe, the cities, villages, roads, canals, rivers, seas, cemeteries, schools, colleges, factories, toilets, washrooms, fairgrounds, and vegetable markets are not dirty anywhere. I have seen with my own eyes that during rains in India, vegetable markets get filled with mud. Sometimes, the vegetables are smeared with mud, and people passing through the mud are in a terrible state. All this is a breeding ground for diseases, and people from clean countries find it very offensive.

All this can be fixed; there is no difficulty in it. But when our system is not serious about it, then managing it or making it clean is impossible. Laws have been made, but it is necessary to implement them. I have seen people who break the law, pollute the country's environment. I saw with my own eyes that auto-rickshaw drivers, where they are not allowed to pass, slip some notes to the policeman on the side. In doing so, both the auto driver, who pollutes the country, and the policeman are responsible. Both of them betray the country and the law in their pursuit of money. Similarly, whenever there is an opportunity to spread filth, no one is careful.

Learn from the countries of Europe. These are countries that, compared to India, do not have the same resources. But in our country, from brooms to factories making large machines have been set up. In my country, Holland, much of the equipment we use comes from India, China, and other countries. But not using them there and making the country dirty is a matter of shame for us.

In our country, garbage is thrown everywhere. In contrast, in foreign countries, there is no such garbage anywhere. We don't even know where the garbage goes. It is either piled up at a place outside the city. Even that is turned into compost with machines and sold at a high price like gold. This can also happen in our country, and this initiative has indeed started. I think if the administration pays some attention to this, this work will be done quickly; otherwise, it will proceed at its own pace.

Other Important Things to Consider

Now we are starting the main theme of the book, and there is a need to pay close attention to it. Perhaps many readers might think that just picking up a broom and cleaning can make the country clean. Yes, that is necessary, but along with it, there are many other things that can make the country clean, which we must learn and consider under all circumstances.

To understand, let me give a simple example. Suppose we have cleaned our house, and it looks beautiful. But the people living inside it do not even wash their faces, do not bathe, and all the things in the house are scattered here and there. The utensils are dirty, and nothing is in its proper place. There are many other things that need attention. Only then can you call the house clean and good, which will also look good to the viewer.

Similarly, with the country, where we have to keep it clean, there are not one but thousands of other things that we need to pay attention to. Then, when all this is done, we can call it "Swachh" (clean). Some people are quite serious about this, and their habits are also good because where they keep the house clean and beautiful, they pay great attention to the internal conditions of the house, ensuring every item is in its place, there is no clutter, and no dirt.

For this, you don't need to be rich. Even a poor person, if they carefully maintain the internal appearance of their house and pay attention to all related tasks, that house can become clean. Rules should be followed.

Many people also try to clean in their own ways, but still, there are often many other things that should be taken care of. That is why in this book, along with keeping the house and country clean, many other things related to cleanliness have been written about. In my opinion, we have tried to do a great work so that no one can laugh at us and can say that your India, your country, your home is completely clean and beautiful, and every person's country should be like this.

I think if we implement the things written in this book in schools, so that children can learn it as a lesson, then the spoiled atmosphere can surely be improved by children telling their elders at home. Besides, many other methods are written in the book, and when we consider all of them, there will be no one like us. The world will praise our name, presenting the truth, by calling us residents of a very beautiful country.

This is the case in European and other rich countries. But when I feel that in some countries, at least over 50% of the people never pay attention to or have knowledge of cleanliness, then what will happen?

Morning

The night is dark. Sometimes, in the black night, the light of the moon and stars, or sometimes the black darkness itself, spreads its color. Time passes, and the Amrit Vela (Ambrosial Hours) begins to sprinkle its nectar, spreading a very pure color. Religious scriptures also praise the Amrit Vela.

Rising near 3 AM during the Amrit Vela, bathing, and meditating on the Name of God is the right time for a human to attain great peace and connect with the Almighty. So, please be gracious with this practice.

The Amrit Vela is full of freshness for attaining maximum peace, oxygen, sitting in meditation (Samadhi), and so on. This period is greatly beneficial for the body, mind, and wealth. Rising during the Amrit Vela makes the body agile, provides a good start for completing tasks, and maintains a power of freshness throughout the day.

Waking up at the Amrit Vela and starting life, starting work, starting the dawn—the entire day remains an 'Amrit' (nectar-filled) experience. Practice this for a few days, and then compare it with the days you wake up late. You will then realize what you have lost and what you have gained.

This is an ocean full of bliss. The examples of saints, great souls, and religious guides who take a dip in it by rising during the Amrit Vela and give us are very precious. It is very essential for purity/cleanliness that the Amrit Vela is observed. You will then surely feel its benefit.

Waking Up

Our term "waking up" refers to getting up in the morning after sleeping. Sleeping is essential, and sleep is very necessary for a human and every living creature or soul. Whatever sleeps, then wakes up.

A few people say to jump out of bed in the morning like a spring, but I say not like a spring. Whenever you wake up in the morning, for a minute or two, calmly steady your mind and feel grateful to God in your heart for blessing you with this morning. Then, briefly glance over the necessary tasks to be done throughout the day so that you know what needs to be accomplished.

Do not wake up, then think about what to do, and then fall back asleep, remaining asleep for another two or four hours.

Create a discipline for waking up, and although it may take some time to establish it, maintain that discipline. Just as you create this discipline for yourself, also inspire your close friends, loved ones, family members, and as many other people as possible. Tell them, "Come, these rules for waking up have been made; you should make them too, and you will see how much benefit there is in life, and your life will automatically move towards purity (uprightness)."

For the elders, the disabled, or the sick in the house, a relaxation of the rules is certainly in order, because the physical activity of everyone definitely changes with age.

The Body

God created the world and 84 lakh species, giving each a body. This body journeys through life and one day comes to an end. Not all bodies are permanent; some live a long life, and some a short one. By engaging in good deeds, a human being receives the greatest blessing of making their birth successful.

The body should be used for benevolence, chanting God's name, working hard, sharing, walking the path of truth, and earning by sharing knowledge. The physical life should not be spent in anti-humanitarian activities that harm society. The body should not be used for playing with dangers that could harm it, leading to a destroyed or finished precious life.

The body should be operated within rules. It is necessary to decide, according to the mind's wisdom, which actions are good for your life and which can lead to ruin. According to the Vedas, scriptures, and holy texts, this body is obtained after great earnings, and whoever has done bad deeds will fall back into the cycle of 84 lakh species. This cycle is very long, and one has to endure great suffering.

The correct use of the body is cleanliness, and to make India clean, the correct use of the body is essential.

Hair

Hair means your body hair. In the Sikh religion, disrespecting hair is forbidden, and God has given hair for very important functions. It is also the identity or seal of a Sikh. All the deities, gurus, and saints in the world generally kept their hair, regardless of their religion. This helps in connecting with God and is a very necessary tool for health. The face also looks beautiful with hair. This precious gift, bestowed by God from birth, must be respected and cared for.

When washing hair, first wet it with water. Then, take soap or whatever you have for cleaning hair in your hand, rub it a little, then apply it to the hair and massage it to create a lather. Leave it for a minute or two so that it mixes with the water in the hair and helps in cleaning. After that, massage it and then rinse it clean with water. Do this at least twice. Then, dry the hair from the water and let it air dry in the sun or wind. Never comb wet hair, nor should you cover it with a turban or cap. Some people dry their hair with hot air, which is also a good thing. Only dry hair should be combed, and you should also apply oil and take other care of it.

Eyes

Eyes are counted among the most essential organs of life. God has done a great service to beings by giving them eyes, because with them they can see the outside world. Realize the importance of eyes by feeling the difficulties in the lives of those who do not have them. The care of eyes in life will become apparent to you from here, how necessary it is and how it should be done. In many countries, I have seen that there is a lack of awareness among people about their care.

Upon waking up in the morning, first, gently massage your eyes with your palms or fingers. After that, during bathing, wash the eyes properly so that no dirt remains on them. Splash your eyes with cold water so that the inner parts are also cleaned of any dirt or accumulation. While splashing water, rub them gently. When you feel that the eyes are clean, you will also feel better in your vision; then the eyes are properly cleaned.

If you feel any deficiency or difficulty in your eyes, then pay attention to it and, if necessary, see a doctor. Care should be taken that the eyesight remains intact, and a doctor's help should be sought whenever needed. Eyes should be protected from dust, dirt, and things that can harm your eyes, and it is necessary to protect them from injury. Do not put things in the eyes that can cause harm. If the eyes are healthy, we can do a lot to make India clean.

Ears

Like eyes, ears are also a beautiful gift from God. Not just humans, but nature and other beings have also been given ears to express their feelings to one another, so that we can address someone with our voice and they can hear. Therefore, the importance of ears is also very high, and we need to pay great attention to them.

During bathing, clean the ears with light water, but do not let water enter the ears. If water enters the ears by any means and does not come out, a doctor's help should be sought so that the ears are not damaged. Do not put sticks or pins in the ears. Cotton swabs are available in the market, but do not use them too much as they can tear the eardrum. If the ears start to discharge, have pain, or any other problem, do not become your own doctor; take the help of a doctor as needed to take care of the ears. Do not slap or hit the ears; it is dangerous.

Once a month, put mustard oil or some other good oil in the ears, but be sure to get information that this oil is not dangerous for the ears. If your ears are like a rabbit's, pointing outwards, there is no need to worry; they can be corrected with the help of doctors. Schoolmasters should not pull children's ears, as it can cause damage. Very loud, thumping music can tear the eardrums. This needs to be taken care of. Listen to knowledge about making India clean and a healthy country with your ears.

Nose

When God bestowed life upon man, He connected it with the process of breathing. This process is essential not only for humans but for all 84 lakh species of nature. Some people recognize this, and some have no knowledge about it. In some form or another, the process of breathing is necessary for every species. Humans and many species breathe through the nose, and the journey of life continues. God has given many creatures two nostrils instead of one, from where they breathe. What a great gift from God this nose is. Along with this, if many creatures have any trouble with their nose, they have also been blessed with the ability to breathe through their mouth. Therefore, it is very necessary to take care of the nose.

However, if there is ever any trouble with the nose, it is essential to take a doctor's advice or get treatment for its care. Sometimes the nose starts bleeding; there is no need to panic too much at that time. Lie down on the ground and look towards the sky. Lie on the ground like this for some time, and the bleeding will stop. But then it is necessary to seek a doctor's help. If there is some dirt in the nose, do not do the cleaning by putting a finger in the nose in front of everyone. Go to one side and clean your nose and pay attention to the problem. Some people blow their nose while standing among people; do not do this, it looks bad. If water is running from the nose, take some hot steam and be careful to protect yourself from the cold. Do not use anyone else's handkerchief for your nose and, if necessary, use a clean handkerchief or tissue. If the hair in the nose becomes long, do not pull it with tweezers; this can cause a boil and bleeding. Some tools are available with which you can solve this problem. Taking care of the nose is taking care of the body, and good care of the body can lead to a clean body and a clean country ahead.

Teeth

To eat food, God has shown great kindness to man and nature by bestowing the gift of teeth. Ask someone who has no teeth and see how many difficulties they have to face. Therefore, we should always be conscious about our teeth and know their value. If there are no teeth, the joy of eating food is lost, and difficulties increase. Teeth help in chewing food and taking it inside, mixing it with liquids, and moving life forward.

Do not break excessively hard things with your teeth. Eating too much sweet food also damages the teeth. Crooked teeth look bad in the mouth, and although it costs some money from a doctor, a treatment has been developed to correct them. You can make your teeth beautiful through that procedure. It is very important to clean the teeth every morning and evening. Many tools like toothbrushes and Colgate have been made for cleaning teeth, but in many places, teeth are still cleaned with a datun (neem twig), which is also a correct thing.

The teeth need to be cleaned well, and after that, the tongue also needs to be brushed with a datun, so that the white substance accumulated on the tongue is completely cleaned, which benefits health. If needed, artificial teeth can also be fitted, and there is no need to worry. If a tooth gets a cavity, a doctor's help is needed. It is important to know how crucial it is for the teeth to be healthy. If your teeth are clean, your face also looks good. A good face is very necessary for a good, clean country.

Neck, Shoulders

By bestowing the gift of the neck, God connected the brain and the rest of the body, so that the brain, like a commander in the head, moves the rest of the body with its commands, and the body follows those commands. Through the neck, the rest of the body's essential nerves travel from the brain, allowing the body to move forward.

You can realize from this how necessary the care of the neck is. The neck and throat definitely need to be protected from cold and heat. Pay attention to it as needed, wear clothes, and if there is any pain, arrange for treatment.

Do not lift so much weight on your head that it adversely affects your neck, causing your neck and body to be harmed and fall victim to disease.

Massaging the neck and shoulders should be done regularly. This can bring you many kinds of benefits to the body. However, if there is any pain or an illness has afflicted you, you should definitely consult a doctor about it. Exercises for the neck and shoulders maintain strength here and lay the foundation for good health.

Do not strangle anyone (literally: break someone's neck), and do not perform any action too aggressively or incorrectly that could shift the vertebrae, as this can create a major problem. Some people stand on the ground with their heads down and legs up, but not everyone should do this because it requires experience, and those who do it without experience can suffer harm.

Arms, Hands

How can we thank God for the gifts He has given us? He has blessed nature with priceless things, the cost of which cannot be repaid. Therefore, it is essential for us to always remain grateful to God for the limbs that have been bestowed upon us.

A human being often does not think about how important the arms and hands are. You do every task with your hands attached to your arms, and there is a need to take care of them in a very good way.

Some people, due to carelessness, get their arms or hands cut off in machinery, so there is a need to pay attention to them during every kind of work. In the event of any pain or trouble, there is a need to be serious about them, because if the arms are not well, then we may be unable to perform the tasks that run our life.

Keep your hands clean, take care of them, and seek a doctor's advice if necessary. If your hands are afflicted with any disease, do not prepare food for others. Protect your hands from dirt and pay complete attention to cleanliness.

In life, your hands are your strength. Rely on them and steer your life in the right direction. Be sure to wash your hands thoroughly before kneading dough or doing any other work, and keep your hands clean at all times.

In some countries, some people clean themselves after using the toilet with water and their hands. After that, we must clean our hands so thoroughly that no dirt remains and there is no bad smell. Massaging the hands, arms, or body can grant the body health. Only a strong and well-nourished body can build an upright country.

Stomach

The stomach is the organ of the body that works to provide food for the entire body. The food we eat first goes into the stomach, and the energy generated from there makes the entire body capable of moving around. Therefore, you can imagine how important an organ the stomach is.

There are no teeth in the stomach, so we should eat food that is suitable for our body and easily digestible. If there is any trouble, pain, or discomfort in the stomach, we must seek a doctor's advice.

Having a large stomach can lead to facing many diseases, and various troubles can arise in the body. Therefore, an effort should be made not to let the stomach grow more than necessary.

To fill one's own stomach, performing bad deeds by hurting the livelihood of others (literally: cutting someone else's stomach) is a great sin. The consequences of this must surely be borne in the court of God. Taking out a tithe (Dasvandh) from one's honest earnings and offering something in service to the distressed, poor, and helpless people is a very virtuous deed.

Kicking someone in the stomach is a great sin, and the punishment for it is surely received by the person in life, whether sooner or later. If gas builds up in the stomach, there is a need to find a remedy. A doctor's help or some home remedies can provide you relief from this ailment.

Many people leave their country and go abroad for the sake of their stomach (livelihood). There, they need to work hard and earn as much money as possible to strengthen themselves.

The stomach of the mother who gives birth to a child must always be cared for. It should not be that when a child grows up, they disrespect the mother's stomach and milk. There can be no worse deed on earth than this.

Private Parts

If we consider any organ given by God, we realize how much harm would be done and how difficult life would be if that organ were missing. Many people are not serious about their private organs and consider and understand them with a feeling that they are just unnecessary parts.

Among the 8.4 million species in the world, God has given humans the knowledge to care for their private organs. There is a need to understand the emotion that underlies the use of these organs as a means for sexual generation (procreation).

Private organs need to be covered by wearing the correct clothing. Do not wear clothes that make people laugh and ridicule you when they look at your private area. Attention must be paid to care and cleanliness. Keeping them dirty can lead to bad odors, lice, itching, abscesses, or boils.

Cleaning the private organs is essential after sexual intercourse; otherwise, several diseases can cause harm. Be sure to use soap for cleaning, and then be sure to use a towel. Do not scratch your private organs in front of everyone; this invites ridicule.

Engaging in sexual activity while under the influence of drugs or medicine damages the private organs. Be aware of this.

If you feel any defect or change, do not hesitate; talk to a doctor. If the organs are hurting or you feel an illness, do not delay consulting a doctor and seeking treatment. The terrible disease called AIDS (referring to STIs/HIV) is spoken of, and you should always keep it in mind.

After bathing, be sure to apply oil to the private organs, and definitely protect them from injury. Washing and oiling the private organs will keep them free from itching and disease, as this is a very important part of the body, and great attention needs to be paid to it. This advice is connected to people who want to build a clean body and an upright nation, which is why it is important.

Legs and Feet

Without legs and feet, a person is useless. Just imagine what life would be like if one had to walk with one's hands. Thank God that what He has given to humanity is very precious, including the legs and feet. If there were no legs, no feet, how would a person walk? If the ability to walk is there, one can go to places of need and move away from places of danger.

It is very essential to pay attention to the cleanliness of the feet. We generally give less respect to the feet, but in reality, they deserve more respect. Place them in warm water for some time, then clean them thoroughly with a towel, apply oil, and massage them well. See the miracle: how many benefits there are to your health. If you can make time to do this once a week or twice a month, you can tell me how much difference you feel in your body.

Wear shoes that do not cause discomfort to your feet while walking, that do not cause blisters, or wounds. Do not wear very tight shoes; this negatively affects and damages the feet.

While walking, do not kick useless things with your feet; do not treat them like a football. This harms both your feet and your shoes.

Pay attention to your legs and feet in hot and cold weather. Wear appropriate clothing. If we know that poor or helpless people are struggling with clothing, then earn a virtue that will be very useful to you by donating some clothes to them.

Use your legs and feet for good deeds. Do not kick anyone. Do not let your nails grow too long, and cut them on time. This is a sign of a clean India.

Other parts of the body

There are many other organs in the body that God has given us for great assistance, but if we were to mention all the organs, the book could become very large. Please understand the essence of the request made in this concise form and definitely apply its effect to your life.

The remaining body parts include the cheek, chin, beard, mustache, forehead, nails, wrists, elbows, back, ribs, knees, ankles, and other body parts, as you all know.

All organs are important, and there is a need to be cautious about them. Great attention needs to be paid to service and care. Writing less about them does not mean their importance is low. For a writer, writing less becomes necessary to adhere to the book's limitations.

The request is that just as we have written about the service and care of some body parts above, the other organs of our body also need this service and care. We learn some things about how to take care of ourselves from society, our parents, and our life experience. I hope you will definitely consider these points.

Wherever anything is essential for a particular organ, we should pay attention to it. If there is an illness, we will pay attention to the treatment. Not caring for the body's organs can cause harm. A vehicle meant to run for ten years will be ruined in just three or four years (if neglected). We must pay attention to what is in our control. God will certainly help you, and He helps those who care for themselves, society, and the Name of God.

Pen

The pen is used for writing, and through writing, we gain a view of time, whether of the future or the past. We owe a great debt of gratitude to the inventor of the pen; otherwise, we would lose so much today.

In earlier times, pens were of different types. Some were carved from the quills of birds or from wooden reeds gifted by nature. Before that, things were written on stones. All these are just evolutionary forms of the pen. Now the computer has replaced the use of the physical pen. Even what is written on a computer can be called a pen, which is fine. But the pen can never truly die; its form and name may change.

It is necessary to write about the use of the pen here. The pen should always be kept in the correct place, and when putting it away, it should be closed, or the writing nib should be retracted. The pen must be closed. If possible, clean the nib so that ink does not accumulate in it, leak, and spoil your clothes.

It is also said that God has a pen with which He writes destinies. Whatever it is—pen, pencil, computer, or anything else that is essential—through which the accounts of actions will one day be settled. We see with our own eyes that everyone's account is settled; no one can escape. The one who does bad receives bad consequences, and the one who does good receives happiness.

Whatever the case, the world reads the writings created by the pen, and it is an item of great importance and is invaluable. Perhaps we may not be able to write its complete history, but understanding our sentiments, you will surely appreciate this writing.

When buying a pen, check it thoroughly to ensure it does not scratch when writing, which might prevent you from writing well on paper and could even tear the paper. Do not buy a tearing pen.

Keep the pen safe from children. Children may spoil paper, damage the pen, and even injure themselves while playing. Keep your pen carefully; it shouldn't be lost every day.

Perhaps before writing, you should respectfully touch it to your forehead so that the pen always writes for welfare. If the pen is broken and no longer useful, respectfully discard it in the trash bin. Throwing it around causes harm.

The tip of the pen is sharp. It is very necessary to close the cap or retract the nib when opening, using, or handling it, so that it does not cause injury. Do not rub the pen unnecessarily on paper, wood, tables, walls, or cardboard. First, performing an action without necessity is useless, and second, it wastes ink, wastes time, and damages the pen.

Many people keep expensive pens in their pocket. Do not give such a pen to anyone, as they might break it, ruin it, or not return it to you, and your expensive pen hobby could be ruined. There are people from many countries who take a pen and do not return it.

What the pen can do, the sword cannot. Therefore, highly value the pen and definitely write how India and the world can become clean (upright) with the pen. Use the pen to write and show people a good path so that lives can be prosperous.

Ink,

Turban

The Dastaar has many other names, such as Pag, Pagri, Turban, and in various countries, it has other distinct names. In the Sikh faith, the Dastaar is the identity and pride of Sikhism. Although the tradition of wearing the turban was seen in various countries, religions, and tribes around the world even in ancient times, its style and structure also appeared different.

In countries near India and in Muslim countries, the Dastaar can never disappear. In earlier times, the turban was a grand and beautiful example, especially worn by kings and emperors. They would adorn the turban with expensive jewelry and ornaments, further increasing its glory.

Where the Dastaar is considered a custom, it is also regarded as a cultural, religious, and diverse tradition. Even today, the Dastaar is considered a symbol of honor. In India, if someone removes another person's turban, the matter can escalate to murder, and many idioms have been created related to this.

In Sikhism, the Dastaar holds a special place; there is a deep relationship between Gurbani, the Sikh, and the Guru's Dastaar. The identity of a Sikh can also be recognized solely by the Dastaar. The policy of the Sikh Gurus regarding the Dastaar was very high. At the time of the martyrdom of the Ninth Guru Sahib in Delhi, the situation was poor, and when Sikhs were not seen in large numbers as circumstances required, the Tenth Guru Sahib commanded that "I will create a Sikh who will be recognized even when standing among millions." At that time, the Dastaar was made mandatory for the Sikh's identity, which a Sikh considers dearer than life itself.

The Dastaar should be tied every day, and it should be regarded as a gift from the Guru. People from other cultures also wear very beautiful turbans; the Rajasthani turban looks very beautiful.

The Dastaar should always be kept clean, and it is essential to take it off and place it in a proper spot when removing it. Never place or throw the Dastaar on the ground, nor toss it up in the air; do not play such games with it. It is like a precious crown adorned on the head; give it complete respect.

Do not give your Dastaar to anyone. Tie the Dastaar in a beautiful manner. Many people tie the turban very beautifully, but I have seen some people whose method of tying is not very good. They should learn the turban style from a craftsman; it is not a difficult task. I saw a photo of a Gursikh Nihang who tied an 800-meter-long Dastaar around 2014, and he is still seen somewhere today. A 7.5 to 8-meter-long Dastaar usually makes a good, beautiful turban.

The colors can vary. Several books have also been written about the Dastaar, and many centers have opened up now that tie or teach how to tie beautiful Dastaars.

Whether a Hindu, Sikh, Muslim, or a Westerner, or anyone from any other religion wears the Dastaar, it is a symbol of respect. It is very essential that the wearer of the Dastaar themselves maintains and cares for its respect.

The House

A house is a very important part of life. Everyone has a house, but its forms can be different. Although we may not see the houses of many beings with our own eyes, at least the 84 lakh species will have different kinds of their own houses where they spend their lives. But here, we are mostly talking about the houses of humans related to humanity.

A house is the biggest need of a person. A house is made of bricks, mud, wood, iron, glass, grass, water, sun, shade, etc. A good choice should be made according to the need of how to build the house. Before building a house, check your pocket to see how much you can afford, and after making a complete plan, start it so that your house is not left halfway. It is most important to complete it and to live within your means.

Before building a house, prepare a map. If possible, get a map made by a draftsman because the same bricks, mud, mortar, cement, and other materials will be used. But those who make maps can give you a better map with the same material, which can be much more beautiful in appearance than a map made by yourself. Always get the house built by a skilled mason. If there is any defect or shortcoming from a bad mason, you may suffer your own loss. Also, choose the material needed to build the house to ensure it is of good quality. Sometimes you can get bad material, which can cause you loss in the future.

Pay full attention to the cleanliness of the house. I went to a friend's house which had a very nice bungalow. The bungalow was very nice, but the household items were just kept here and there in the house. Old clothes somewhere, towels on the stairs, underwear, blankets were just thrown around. There were boxes and things lying around everywhere in the house. A poor person's house might have been better inside than his bungalow. So this is a wrong thing. It is sad when such a nice house is built but not maintained or kept properly.

Keep an eye on breakages in the house, the latrine, the bathroom, everywhere, and do not create unnecessary clutter. When building a house, proper arrangements for air and sunlight, and drainage of water, etc., should be kept in mind. When building a house, also keep in mind full security arrangements so that no animals, birds, thieves, etc., can break into your house. Always lock the house when you go out and if possible, make a place in the house where you can keep your valuable things, where there are fewer chances of danger reaching.

If possible, make a place in your house where you can sit and do your prayers and thank God for giving you these gifts. Good houses can become the face of a good country, and where such conditions exist, that can be called a clean country.

Indoors and Outdoors, Walking

India is a large country, and with a population of approximately 1.47 billion, it ranks first in the world, with China being second. In India and some other countries, the first activity after waking up in the morning is going out/in (meaning using the toilet/latrine), and only then do other tasks begin. After this, every person should take a walk, which helps maintain health and agility in the body.

The act of going out/in should be done comfortably, but some people strain themselves due to constipation, which causes several diseases in the body. If there is such a great difficulty, it is necessary to consult a doctor.

Some people soil themselves while defecating or urinating, and they do not clean properly. This habit is very bad, and there is a need for improvement in this. Approximately 70–80% of toilets in Asian countries are very dirty, and people there consider it an insult to clean them. In contrast, this is not seen in Western countries. Here, every person cleans their own toilet, and there is no servant or cleaning worker. Yes, in offices, some cleaning contracts are given out.

I once went to a religious place and used the toilet, where there were about 10 cubicles. Upon opening the doors of the first four, I could not stand inside for even a second because there was so much filth, and many people had not even flushed water after using the toilet. I was very saddened by this. This means that people have no knowledge of these things, and there is a great need for education on this matter.

The toilet/washroom in my house is so clean that you can say it is absolutely pristine (literally: however much you lie, it is still very clean). I have also seen this in some hotels; the toilets and washrooms are extremely dirty, especially in countries where people consume paan (betel quid), the level of filth is extraordinarily high.

I believe that a house whose toilet is not clean can never be clean, and what good thoughts will that person have about the country? After using the washroom/toilet at your house, clean it completely. You need to use the necessary soaps and other liquid substances that ensure proper cleanliness.

If every person takes a walk, diseases will fear entering their body. Only a person who keeps these points in mind can build a clean India.

Bathing

Bathing is considered essential not just for every human being, but even for animals and birds. I have seen such animals and birds that bathe every day and find water for themselves. But a very large number of people exist who do not like to bathe or do not know how, and they are happy to remain dirty. Of course, some people definitely start their day every day with a good bath.

Here I should mention that you should use water according to the season—cold for summer and warm for winter. If you have a bathroom built in your house, these facilities are usually available in it.

First, wet your body with water and then rub soap on it. Feel the lather of the soap, then rub it well, and finally clean it off with water. If possible, this process can be done twice, completing the bath. Then, shake the water off your body with your hands, and then use the towel or cloth you have to dry or clean the water from your body.

After doing this, some people rub perfume, some use powder, and some people apply oil, etc., to their bodies. This is a good thing; it helps the body with a good fragrance and feels nice in terms of cleanliness.

Do not use someone else's soap or towel. After bathing, be sure to hang your wet towel to dry and take care of it. Do not use it to clean utensils, clean tables, chairs, or do any other such work around the house. Keep it only for your own bathing.

Do not use someone else's towel, nor use it to dry your hands after washing them before eating, because you do not know which parts of the body that towel may have been used to clean, and your hands may become dirtier instead of cleaner.

Be sure to bathe at least once every day. If you do dusty or dirty work, then bathe again before sleeping at night.

After bathing, also pay attention to the cleanliness of your washroom. If you go to someone else's house and bathe there, you should not litter in their washroom or do anything that would make them say that you have left the washroom in a bad state.

Prayer and Worship

In my opinion, worship and prayer are a very essential part of life. What to speak of humans, all of creation, in their own ways and according to their own understanding, perform worship and prayer to express gratitude to God. Many animals, birds, and humans have been seen or felt to be connected with worship and prayer. Simply being grateful to God is also a form of worship and prayer.

God has given life to beings, and for this act, beings should remain grateful to God. This is a wonderful thing, and to thank God, the being first adopts the path of worship and prayer. Worship and prayer teach a person purity in life; in contrast, observing the life of an atheist reveals the difference between what is right and what is wrong.

Perform worship and prayer from the heart. There is no benefit in worship done for show; that is deceiving God. Do not perform such worship that it brings a stain upon humanity or causes hurt to the very existence of God, lest you be known as a sinner.

The poor should not think that because they don't have resources like the wealthy, God is not happy with them, or that they cannot offer anything to God. But God is hungry for faith, love, devotion, and affection. He discerns the inner love of every single person. The poor person just needs to worship God from the heart with a humble offering, like a sesame seed or flower, and He becomes happy.

Priests and administrators at religious places often look down upon poor people, and this is wrong of them, because God has created everyone and God has given everyone the right to worship and pray.

Many fraudulent 'babas' (self-proclaimed holy men), in order to swindle people, tell them to perform worship and prayer by frightening and threatening them. This is all a sham. God is not found through money, but through loving devotion.

So, be aware. You can worship and pray to God while walking, while working, or by sitting in a quiet place. In any case, you should continue to worship and pray according to your own circumstances. And you should pray that we may become pure, and that our country and our world may become pure.

Atheism

People who do not believe in the existence of God are called atheists. Beliefs are our own, but whatever the case, God cannot be denied. This is the one and only power that is omnipresent. Where there are people who believe in the existence of God, there are also atheists, and they ask: "Where is God? Let someone show Him to us." Through their arguments, they even manage to prove this point (to their own satisfaction).

It is not easy to make atheists religious, but still, one should not give up trying. Some people will certainly change their views someday and start believing in God. Sometimes, if someone is an atheist, some people might kill them, but this is wrong. The right approach is to engage with them in a full assembly, have a discussion, and try to make them understand. Listen to their arguments and prove that God exists, because you say God exists, and they say there is no God.

Furthermore, if there are religious people in a family and one member is an atheist, you should definitely sit and discuss things with them, but ensure your discussion is full of love. Occasionally, involve a more knowledgeable person in the conversation as well. You should certainly show or have atheists read religious books, CDs, or DVDs, which might have an effect on them.

Kitchen

In life, a human being has millions of desires, but not all of them can be fulfilled. People have a great interest in and need for food and drink. The kitchen has a big connection to the arrangement of food and drink. Every house definitely has a kitchen, whether it's the hut of a poor person or a king's palace. Whether it is beautifully constructed inside the house, or just earthen stoves built in a corner of the courtyard, they are all called the kitchen.

The location of the kitchen in the house should be chosen thoughtfully, and the kitchen should be constructed after careful consideration. It should not happen that after a week, you tear it down and move it to another place. This causes many kinds of damage and creates dust and debris. Before constructing the kitchen, one must carefully consider the arrangements for gas, air, water, light, electricity, and other facilities.

The kitchen should have a proper system for cleanliness. Food items should be stored well in containers. Poor people can also do this. Keep lentils, spices, flour, grain, and other edibles securely in containers so that they are protected from dust and debris, and so that mice, cats, dogs, and other animals cannot affect them.

Some people carelessly throw away dirty utensils, and sometimes the filth on the dirty dishes accumulates so much that it becomes difficult to look at them. Sometimes, insects and worms also breed there. Often, the utensils are so dirty that they feel sticky, covered in lentil and vegetable residue, and they smell bad. Do not let this happen; this is all due to the filth in the kitchen.

Clean the kitchen every time after cooking. If you are short on time, be sure to clean the kitchen before going to sleep at night. Clean it with chemicals twice a week. Dish soap is available in the market. One bottle can last one to three months, and it ensures good cleaning when washing dishes. It is better not to clean dishes with dirt, sand, or ash now, because soap is superior, and the cleaning achieved with it is much better.

Do kitchen work with your head covered, because hair commonly falling into the food is a matter of causing contamination and harm. Proper cleanliness is essential in the kitchen, which is a kind of medicine for good health. Relatives and friends who value cleanliness do not like to eat at the homes of people who don't maintain hygiene, and this brings a bad reputation.

Do not keep animals like chickens, goats, cows, buffaloes, dogs, pigs, etc., or birds in the kitchen. After finishing work in the kitchen, check the fire, gas, water, and other things, and turn off what needs to be turned off. Do not allow children to urinate or defecate in the kitchen, do not spit there, do not sit and drink alcohol, and do not create any such inappropriate environment.

Do not keep more wood, cow dung cakes, or fuel than necessary in the kitchen; this breeds pests and increases filth. Nowadays, most kitchen work is done with gas cylinders. Be sure to completely control the gas, ensuring it is not leaking or causing any damage, and after finishing your work, make absolutely sure the gas is turned off.

Travel by Vehicle

Cars and vehicles are built for our convenience and set the pace for keeping up with our fast-moving modern life. Needs increase with time. Cars, motorcycles, scooters, trucks, tractors, etc., are necessary modes of transport. You should only purchase them if there is a necessity and you have the income to support it. While these vehicles are a necessity today, they also become an extra expense. Only drive such vehicles as needed.

Driving unnecessarily increases expenses and pollutes the environment with smoke. Do not waste time. Before driving these means of transport, be sure to learn the rules of driving, and do not drive without a license. Those who drive without a license should face fines and legal action. This ultimately benefits us because many accidents happen due to our lack of knowledge about vehicles.

Many people, especially young men who are involved in casual relationships (or 'showing off'), form gangs and take a wrong path—this is very wrong. The vehicles they drive recklessly will certainly cause you harm one day. Drive cars or vehicles according to the rules only. Observing rules regarding speed limits, 'No Entry,' 'Horn Please,' and 'No Horn Please,' and following regulations when overtaking someone is essential.

It should be mandatory to have cars and vehicles inspected and passed by authorities every one or two years so that damaged, broken-down vehicles do not cause pollution or any other kind of harm to anyone.

Buying vehicles by taking out a loan is not sensible. Many people take loans or companies give loans and keep selling vehicles, but the income is not sufficient. After a short time, the companies seize the vehicles of those who fail to pay the installments, which leads only to loss. I know one family whose father brought home three separate vehicles—two for his sons and a motorcycle. But after some time, none of them could pay any installments. Eventually, all three vehicles were taken away because they had no income and had just brought three vehicles home to park them.

Take good care of your vehicle and also pay attention to safety. I have seen people whose seven- or eight-year-old children start driving vehicles—this is very wrong. In Europe, an 18-year-old can get a license, and that too by passing a test which is not easy. Parents should be conscious of this and respect the law.

Take care of the maintenance and repair of your cars and whatever vehicles you own, and never put your life in danger. Never show off while driving a vehicle, and do not compete with others by driving fast. Life is very precious, and you must work towards making a clean India.

Flowers and Plants

Flowers and plants have been a source of beauty for centuries. Wherever flowers and plants are found, people from all over the world consider it beautiful, and if there is a special spot, they go to see it. In our country, Holland, there is a place named Keukenhof, and it is the most beautiful flower garden in the world, where thousands of varieties of special flowers from around the globe are planted, and great attention is paid to their care. However, this place is only open for approximately eight weeks out of the year. People from far-off countries come by plane to see this place. It is difficult to fully tour the entire place in about a single day, and you have to buy a ticket for it. When you arrive here, you will see that it is a different world, and the place is so beautiful that people often come here to take special photos, shoot films, and enjoy life.

Flower farming has also started in India, and by growing many different types of flowers, India is advancing in this field of agriculture. The flower trade in India has also progressed significantly. These flowers are brought in large quantities and used for decoration at weddings, Gurudwaras, Mandirs, Mosques, and on other festive occasions. At Sri Darbar Sahib (Golden Temple), decorations worth millions of rupees are made with flowers several times a year. Flower garlands are also offered in Mandirs and Gurudwaras, and wherever there are idols of deities, they are placed around their necks to offer respect and devotion.

There is a special connection between flowers and a happy heart, and bouquets of flowers are also presented as tokens of love and respect. Many medicines are also made from flowers. In foreign countries, flowers are given as gifts in homes. Sometimes, if someone in a foreign country is upset, some people give them flowers to cheer them up and resolve the disagreement. Flowers are very precious, and their sentiment is very high.

For any clean country, the presence of flowers is very essential to enhance its beauty. Special places are made beautiful by planting flowers, trees, and plants. Many people also incorporate them into their homes to make the atmosphere feel like that of flowers.

Related to this is the importance of fruits. People plant fruit trees at home, on farms, and create orchards, which is a good practice. In our country, many different types of flowers, plants, and fruit trees are now seen much more often, and the production of good quality is also evident. This also increases trade, and the country becomes prosperous and healthy. Fruits improve health, and many types of medicines, juices, and other products are made from them, which help to make life prosperous.

Our plea is that every person who has a suitable space should plant some flower and fruit plants. When these plants bear fruit, they will fill their homes with happiness. Nowadays, many universities in India are also creating and selling many varieties of fruits and flowers across the country, and these fruits and flowers are extremely valuable and beneficial to you from all perspectives—they are like a life-restoring herb. Where you drink the juice of some fruits, you can also benefit from their peels, and every single part of the plant is nothing but beneficial for you. There is no harm in them, and a country where this kind of thinking is established can always go far in terms of faith, beauty, and economic progress.

So, to make our country beautiful, by planting fruits, flowers, and trees, we must advance this thinking and make the country, and the world, clean.

Stairs / Ladders

The ladders (or steps) of life are very essential, and every person wishes that they could make every moment a step, climbing the steps to the destination of success. It is difficult to understand every step, but if you have wisdom when climbing, the path becomes easy.

It is necessary to pay careful attention when climbing up or descending stairs/ladders. Therefore, wherever a ladder or staircase is to be installed or built, it should be done with great care and deliberation so that our purpose is fulfilled and no kind of danger is created.

The pole-style ladder (stepladder/extension ladder) is still used in many places, but before climbing it, its feet/base should be checked thoroughly. It shouldn't happen that you climb up and a rung breaks, or that the feet are not properly dug in when it is set up. It shouldn't happen that you climb up and the ladder slips, causing you injury or broken limbs.

If the rungs of a ladder are wobbly, use it only after repairing it. One should not risk climbing on broken rungs tied with ropes. If the ground where you are setting up the ladder is wet or slippery, then be sure to take care of the feet of the ladder and place them correctly so they don't slip.

There is also a fear of slipping on a domestic cemented staircase with wet steps. Be mindful that your feet cannot slip on dry steps; there is always a need to keep the steps clean. Do not use material on the stairs that could cause you to slip and fall, such as some people installing tiles, as your foot can slide on those tiles and an accident can happen.

Do not make the stairs too narrow in the first place, because you cannot build stairs every day. Keep in mind that there should be enough space for you to easily carry items up and bring them down.

It is necessary to fix a railing alongside the wall of the staircase so that you can hold onto it with your hand while climbing the stairs. This will be helpful; otherwise, an accident can sometimes happen to you. If you have installed an expensive carpet or other material on the stairs, do not go up wearing shoes, because if the material gets dirty, it is not easy to clean or wash, and this is your loss.

If someone's heartbeat speeds up while climbing stairs, it means there is something in your body that needs to be discussed with a doctor. Be aware of the need to check (the stability of the ladder) when climbing someone up and then removing the ladder. Always be vigilant against such dangers.

A lift (elevator) is also a kind of staircase. In tall buildings or wealthy homes, people install lifts instead of stairs, and they need to be used carefully. It shouldn't happen that children treat it as a toy and play games inside the lift, as that too can cause harm at any time.

If you want to stay healthy, you should definitely climb or run up the stairs in your house or flat—two, four, five, seven, ten times, or even more—with caution, as your health can improve significantly.

Do not climb or descend stairs while eating, drinking, or getting dressed. This can cause you to feel dizzy, and you could fall victim to an accident. Paying attention to these matters is very important for making any country clean.

Socks

Socks provide various benefits for your feet and are very essential for your health. Generally, winter and summer socks are made of slightly different materials, and they can offer you special benefits. When we wear socks, we mostly need to take care that our feet are not dirty and that our shoes are not dirty either. It is necessary to wash socks on time.

Some people's socks smell bad because they don't wash them for a long time, and so much dirt accumulates in them that it becomes a substance which starts to stink. Never pick up or borrow and wear someone else's socks, because there might be germs on their feet that could harm you.

If you have wounds on your feet, you need to pay attention to why this happened and whether the socks you are wearing are perhaps unsuitable for your feet. When washing clothes, do not wash socks with your pants, shirts, or other clothes, as they may have more grime or dirt in them.

Buy fewer white socks because they get dirty quickly with dust and debris, or if even a little dirt gets on them. Do not wear very tight socks. Only wear socks that do not cause discomfort to your feet.

Some people throw their socks under their sleeping mattress, under the sofa, or scatter them around the house—you should not do this. Create a special place for your socks, or when you take off your shoes, place the socks inside the shoes and keep them in the designated place where you usually remove them.

Shoes(Jutti)

Feet are the most important part for taking a person from one place to another and for maintaining the pace of life. Shoes were invented for the protection of the feet, and shoes provide a person with many kinds of benefits and assistance in human life.

When buying shoes, care should be taken to ensure the size allows for comfort. Shoes that are too loose or too tight are also harmful. When buying shoes, do not just look at very cheap shoes that might break within one or two days or a week. Therefore, consider your budget and buy shoes thoughtfully so that the money you spend is fully justified.

Also, buy shoes according to your work. For example, a player needs one kind of shoe. A field worker or farmer has a different kind of shoe. Which shoe is most suitable for an office worker? People who work in jobs with various dangers, such as factories or house construction companies, where materials sometimes fall, have special safety shoes with specially constructed toes, so that even if something falls on them, your feet are not injured.

Leather shoes were used very widely in ancient times and lasted a long time, but now, due to the availability of shoes made from other materials, the demand for leather shoes has decreased. If they are made, they are expensive. As a result, their market is declining, but there is no replacement for them.

Due to certain illnesses, doctors in foreign countries prescribe special custom-made leather shoes to patients, and this leads to many improvements in their health.

When wearing shoes, be sure to wear socks. This provides comfort to your feet and protection from various harms. Pay sincere attention to the cleanliness of your shoes. Keep a brush or polish at home, and before going out, be sure to check your shoes to ensure they are not so dirty or muddy that it affects your reputation.

Do not kick stones with your shoes while walking on the road; this is harmful to both you and your shoes. If you have the means and income, definitely buy and give shoes or slippers to the poor, sick, or helpless people so that they can receive some assistance in life.

The Watch/Clock (Ghadi)

The watch (or clock) is very essential for life because it informs a person about time. If you want to run the activities of your life correctly, you need to recognize the value of the watch and the pace of the time it indicates. Otherwise, you will fall behind, and you could suffer great loss.

Keep the watch prominent, value it, and divide up your work accordingly. Create discipline and a schedule for which tasks need to be done at what time, and they will become successful and easy. If possible, create a timetable for two weeks or a month, and keep enough flexibility in it so that minor changes do not harm your work.

In earlier times, the watch was carried in the pocket. Then, after a change, watches started being worn on the wrist, and generally, this is the custom that prevails worldwide now. These days, watches run on batteries, whereas before, watches were wound with a key.

Modern watches have many more functions, and they help manage many of your tasks. Nowadays, watches can tell you how fast you are walking, what your heart rate is, if you have received a phone call, they have an alarm, weather information, and 10–15 other functions that can be very helpful to your life. Therefore, there is a need to appreciate and value the watch.

Before 1975, only a rare few people had a watch, and it was a status symbol. People used to ask the person with the watch for the time, and there was also a tradition of borrowing a watch from one another. But now, watches have become very cheap, and sometimes one person has more than one watch. I feel that I must have at least 25 watches lying around, but I only wear one when it is necessary. I have distributed at least 25–30 watches to people, and every person should definitely get a watch so they can know the value of time.

Opening a watch and tampering with it will only damage the watch. Some people have a habit of checking the time constantly or rubbing the watch every little while. If the battery-operated watch's cell wears out, you must get a new cell replaced, as sometimes they leak and damage the watch.

To create a clean India or a clean world, there is a great need to know the value and importance of the watch, and also to act accordingly.

Bangles (Vangaan)

Many things about bangles are applicable, similar to watches. The care of bangles also aligns closely with the practices for watches. Create a special place for bangles, arrange them neatly, and only wear bangles that fit correctly.

Pay special attention to the care and security of gold bangles. The times we live in mean there are sometimes people who will rob you of your gold jewelry and cause you harm, so there is a need to be careful with this item.

Very beautiful artificial bangles are available in the market that can be much more attractive than real gold and can adorn you for a long time.

Tissues or Handkerchiefs

The tissue is an invention from European or "white" countries. It is a very soft paper whose purpose is to be a counterpart to the handkerchief, but the difference is that a handkerchief can be washed, while a tissue is used and thrown away—it cannot be washed.

In Europe, the use of tissues is generally very widespread, and their cost is also very low, so every person can use them without incurring any financial loss. In some countries, where people have little knowledge of them or are not accustomed to them, if they ever receive a tissue for use, they use it and simply throw it on the road. This contributes to the increase in littering in the country.

In European countries, designated bins are placed everywhere for tissues, where you are supposed to discard them, and anyone who knows the local rules generally never litters by throwing them on the ground.

Every person needs to carry a handkerchief or tissue, because you may need it at any time for cleaning your nose, eyes, hands, or other such tasks where a handkerchief can be useful when needed.

I think the tissue is a good item. If your handkerchief gets dirty or becomes wet because you have a cold and clean yourself with it, it contains a lot of germs/dirt. The rest is up to your own thinking. Both items are good in their own right and are very essential for a Clean India and a Clean World.

Spectacles (Eyeglasses / Eye-wear)

In ancient times, people's diets were very simple and free of chemicals, so spectacles were rarely seen on anyone. Sometimes people would even tease them by calling them "Spectacles Baba" because people's eyesight generally remained strong.

As the era of food adulteration arrived, people's health started to decline, and their eyesight began to weaken. However, the progress of science found the solution in spectacles. Within about 40 to 50 years, spectacles became so common that nearly every household has someone wearing them.

This is not a bad thing; if you receive some convenience, wearing spectacles is not wrong. If you have some means, you should buy and provide spectacles to those who need them—the helpless people—so that they can gain some facility in their lives.

Always get your spectacles checked by a good doctor, because they use fine machinery to check carefully and see which spectacles and which number are correct for you, so that you can benefit from them.

Do not clean your spectacles with just any cloth. You can get a special small cloth (a wipe) from the spectacle shop itself, with which you can clean them properly.

Enthusiastic people sometimes buy various types of spectacles from the market, and some wear very beautiful or attractive glasses and try to impress people by calling themselves a "hero" and flaunting a certain style.

Some people's spectacle lenses are breakable, but it is much more beneficial to spend a little more money and get lenses that will not break even if the spectacles fall. This can prevent many kinds of damage.

Many people use contact lenses instead of spectacles, and this practice has advanced significantly with new technology nowadays, but care needs to be taken with them.

There are certain measures you can take to avoid needing spectacles, such as splashing cold water on your eyes or eating certain foods that can maintain your eyesight for a long time and provide you with many kinds of benefits.

There is a need to get your eyes and spectacles checked every two to two-and-a-half years. If there has been any decrease or increase in your vision, you can get new spectacles, which can benefit you more.

Kajal (Kohl)

In ancient times, Kajal was invented for the brightness of the eyes. It often yielded very good results. Customarily, on the day of Diwali, a ghee lamp would be lit, and an earthen bowl would be placed above it. The soot (carbon black) generated by the ghee lamp's flame would adhere to the bottom of the bowl. Our elders would clean this soot the next morning and consider the Kajal made from it to be a medicine that sharpened the eyesight.

Perhaps that was correct. Similarly, many types of Kajal began to be produced in the market, and they proved to be cheap, good, and beneficial. They can cure minor ailments, but if there is a more serious problem, then relying solely on Kajal is not right; it is very necessary to consult a doctor.

Some snake charmers or Bengalis (often used as a colloquial term for tricksters) just tell lies, falsely claiming that they have Kajal made with the medicine of an eagle's eggs or a hawk's eggs, and that applying this Kajal will make the eye as sharp as a hawk's. There is no need to trust such people too much; they often take money from you and sell you fake items, needlessly cheating you.

If you need to buy Kajal, readymade Kajal is available in the market that is manufactured by companies.

Explaining to Unclean People

It is the duty of every person to keep the place where they live, where their home is, and where their country is—of which they are a citizen—beautiful and clean, and to perform good deeds. Staying away from filth and close to cleanliness is a very good rule that applies to them personally and to every citizen of their country.

If every citizen fulfills their duty to their country even more than to their own home, the country can always remain clean. Sometimes one hears about certain countries, "Don't go there, they are very dirty countries." Think how bad and low the reputation of that country must be. You can never call that country clean, and people will hesitate greatly to go there.

Some countries, according to common perception, like Switzerland, are very beautiful countries. Yes, this is quite true, and Europe and other wealthy countries are quite beautiful because they are clean. Similarly, we must work diligently on the campaign started by Modi Ji for our India, and then there will be no shortcoming in our country; people will respect it by considering it a clean nation.

Now, the matter is that every country has some unclean people. Even in these countries where I live, an unclean person is occasionally seen. There is a program on television, perhaps called "Airport," which relates to passengers arriving at an airport in some country. There was a man named Thomas who went to Australia. I don't know if he was from America or somewhere else, but due to his clothes and the bad smell emanating from the filth on him, they did not grant him entry for that reason alone, and they put him on the return flight.

Therefore, it is the duty of every one of us to do such work for our country that people praise it and can go there to enjoy its cleanliness. A separate book could be written just about the people there (who are unclean), but even so, this book can cover many things, from bathing and washing to walking around, etc.

This (advice) is only applicable to those people whose routine involves less cleanliness and more filth. May those people certainly take some learning from this book, and by adopting this path, they can make themselves and their country clean.

Casting a Vote

India remained enslaved due to the rule of some foreign powers, and educated people, or any person, can imagine to some extent and visualize the life that enslaved people experienced. For approximately 800 years, there was constant bloodshed and slaughter under the rule of the Mughals and Afghans, and the land of India was commonly drenched with blood. History is witness that 50,000 people were killed in a single day here.

The first Prime Minister of independent India was Shri Jawaharlal Nehru Ji, and the system of voting was initiated here. Since then, the right to vote has been continuously granted, which continues to this day. The party that secures a majority in the elections gets the right to govern the state and the country.

People today are very well-educated, and they should use the time of voting to carefully choose who to vote for, and whose activities have been good for the country. It would be a good policy to never vote again for any leader who does not deliver good results for the country.

Initially, women in India did not have the right to vote, but when Baba Sahib Ambedkar Ji wrote the Constitution, he performed a great act by securing the right to vote for them.

Some people in India are affiliated with certain political parties, and even if that party performs poorly and engages in corruption, they continue to vote only for them. There is a need to change this policy. The youth can play a good role in this. If votes are cast with thoughtful consideration for the future, the country can become clean and achieve progress.

Disownment（Bedakhli）

Society is created for good deeds. Lust, anger, greed, attachment, and ego (Kām, Krodh, Lobh, Moh, Hankaar) corrupt a person so much that they step out of the line of humanity and enter the line of villainy/devilry. This is seen in some way, in every country and every society.

Such people create problems for society and even do things to their own parents, siblings, and their surroundings that an enemy would not do. Such tragedies continue to come to light.

Especially the current generation is advancing more in this (negative behavior). In contrast, the people of the past—who were like our parents or even like us—had negligible amounts of this feeling (of disrespect or malice), and they did not consider turning away from their society to be a good thing.

For those people who turn away from society and their parents and stand in the line of enemies, if they do not reform themselves, the good thing is that society should not support them. To protect the respect of parents and elders, if no other path is found, and if the final knot has to be tied (a common idiom meaning if all efforts fail), then legally disowning them to secure and advance one's own life is necessary, as the world is not small (meaning there are opportunities elsewhere).

Such people should also consider what they stand to gain by being disowned, turning away from society, and turning away from their parents due to the reasons for which they are being disowned. If they have only suffered loss instead of improvement in life and have reached the point of ruin, what name will you give to such a life? Perhaps they will only know this after their family is ruined.

An honorable person, be it a parent or an elder, must become strong and free themselves from such relationships, and then their name will be saved. The country's name will also be saved, and that country will be truly clean where people who are subject to disownment are not present.

Other Languages

Generally, in our country, according to information, there are 22 to 23 official languages, and if you total all the languages emerging from these, they are said to number over 1600. The mother tongue of India is Hindi, and yet many people do not even know Hindi; they only speak the language they learned from birth in their region or from their tribe. People traveling to remote parts of India sometimes encounter a problem if they go to backward areas or villages, where there is no one who even speaks Hindi.

Well, this is also the case in many other countries, where more than one language is spoken in a single country. There are some countries that only have one language, and the most widely spoken language in the world is English.

Some people can speak more than one language, and some people are knowledgeable enough to speak quite a number of languages. In ancient times, sages and hermits (Rishi Munis) had knowledge of so many languages that they could not only understand and speak the languages of humans but also of trees, rivers, streams, and animals and birds.

To make India clean, it is most necessary for the people of India to learn Hindi first. In addition to that, the globally recognized language, English, is also known by many people in India. With its help, they can manage many tasks correctly when they go abroad.

When I was traveling from India, I was in a certain country with some friends, and we had such a big language problem that no one could understand what we were saying. There was also a lot of snow outside, which made our situation very difficult. However, after a few hours were wasted, someone did eventually help us, although they didn't understand our language either.

Such language problems arise for every person who goes abroad, or sometimes even within their own country. That's why I say that the more other languages you can learn, the better. And here is one special thing: Punjabi people are very proficient. Even in Punjab, they will start speaking the language of the laborers who come to work there, but the laborers generally do not learn Punjabi. The same is true abroad: wherever a Punjabi person goes, they learn the local language, but the local people generally do not learn Punjabi.

I hope that they will seriously need to use this quality to play their part in making the world and India clean, and I have good hopes (that they will do so).

Spitting

Saliva is connected to the life of not only humans but all living beings in nature. We can see it in some form, or sometimes it is invisible to us. Using it correctly is a matter that requires serious thought.

The help that saliva provides in digesting food is very valuable. Without saliva, food cannot be digested. Please pay special attention to this; it is a very essential part of the human body, and many internal functions of the body are linked to it. It keeps the body's processes moving.

However, in some forms, it has to be expelled from the body in its primary form, which can cause many deficiencies in the body (referring to the waste of a valuable bodily fluid). It is a very precious part of the body.

Spitting everywhere and polluting the environment by openly breaking the law is a very bad thing. Never spit among people. If necessary, spit in a bathroom or a sink. Also, be careful that people do not call you an "unclean person" after seeing you.

Many people litter by spitting everywhere. If a bathroom or sink is not nearby, use a tissue, paper, or handkerchief if you have one. If not, go aside and spit where no one can see you. Blowing your nose is a very similar issue.

Many people keep bidis, chewing tobacco (zarda), or other tobacco in their mouths and spit all day long, both inside and outside the home. In Moradabad, Meerut, and Gujarat, and every other place where people extensively use gutka, paan, tobacco, etc., they fill the roads with spit, which is a very bad practice. It is necessary to fine such people and make them aware. Signs should be put up everywhere stating that spitting is prohibited here.

Many people spit while talking; some even spit on the other person's face. Such people need to be careful and should change this habit.

While preparing food, cover your mouth with a cloth or be mindful that your saliva does not drop into the food. This spreads diseases, and others may end up eating your filth.

Sometimes, some problems related to saliva are seen in people. If it is necessary, consult a doctor about it and act on their advice. Children should be taught in school to go home and make their family members aware of such instructions.

Makeup

Makeup means somehow making your body appear more beautiful than its reality using external substances. This is not a bad thing, but sculpting nature's gift in your own way is not a great thing either. It is forbidden in the Sikh religion, and in several other religions as well. The ancient gods and goddesses of India have been fond of makeup, jewelry, and adornments.

I would say that you should certainly wear makeup, but don't overdo it (literally: don't let the water pass over your head). Keep in mind that the festival of Karva Chauth holds great importance in Indian tradition. Belief is a personal matter, but it is a valuable thing for those who observe it.

Today, wives pray and fast for the long life of their husbands, but to look especially beautiful, they go to beauty parlors or wear makeup to enhance their beauty and try to appear as attractive as possible to their husbands—this is not a wrong thing to do.

The makeup washes off at night, and if the heart is beautiful along with the makeup, then it becomes number one. Wear makeup that is appropriate for the season, colors, clothes, circumstances, and the festival. Sometimes, people do things that invite ridicule because they lack information about this. So, my friend, don't rush; be careful.

If possible, clean your makeup before sleeping; otherwise, makeup can rub off on the bedsheets, and some colors are very difficult to remove. Makeup is only for a few hours, not forever. Some people spend so much money on it that women wash off and clean thousands of rupees worth of makeup after five or six hours. The person who has the money should also understand that this is quite a big unnecessary expense.

I have heard about some people who borrow money from neighbors to get makeup—this is not sensible at all; it is foolishness. If a man compliments a woman's makeup for a certain purpose, she will certainly smile and thank him, but don't forget that you might also get slapped (be careful). Keep makeup away from children. It shouldn't happen that children misuse it and cause harm to themselves or you.

Some women, by criticizing or praising the makeup of other women, sometimes create an atmosphere of quarrel or sometimes an atmosphere of happiness by speaking certain words. Regarding makeup, don't wear such heavy makeup that even your family cannot recognize you. It has been seen that a child was unable to recognize his own mother.

Telephone（Phone）

The invention of the telephone has shortened the distances of the world. In the past, getting a phone was very difficult, and having one installed was also difficult. After 1987-88, STD (Subscriber Trunk Dialing) services, etc., opened up, and now the progress is such that everyone has a phone in their pocket and can dial a number in seconds to any corner of the world.

Families living in the country and abroad should talk to essential people at the right time and keep checking on their well-being and peace. You can also talk face-to-face via video call on the phone.

The telephone has become one of the prominent essential items in today's world. If we use it correctly, we gain many kinds of conveniences. Some people talk unnecessarily on the phone for hours every day. Even if your calls are free, this wastes your time and spoils your habits, which results in less benefit and more harm. Only talk about work on the phone.

If today's young men and women stay awake for 15 to 18 hours, they spend most of this time on their phones. They learn very little from this and waste more time unnecessarily, which is causing a great deal of harm.

A trend has started now where you might not even do a penny's worth of work, yet everyone has a phone that is more expensive than their status allows, because many phones are now available on installments. Then, when you can't pay the installments, you get caught in difficulties. I have received calls from at least three or four people saying, "Our phone installment is due; please send us some money, as we need to pay the installment." This is not a very sensible thing, and you should only buy a phone that is within your means.

You should only buy a phone that is not difficult for you to operate, because nowadays phones have so many functions that they are not quickly understood. Then you have to seek help from others and face many kinds of problems.

Do not give your phone to others; they might use your phone for some wrong purpose and get you into trouble. They might also learn many of your secrets, which could result in your loss. Keep your phone safe; anyone might try to snatch your phone. Always keep the phone in a case so that if it falls, it can be protected as much as possible.

If you have a nice, expensive, and very beautiful phone, do not show off in front of people; anyone can snatch your phone. Use the phone very cautiously while walking on the road, as any snatcher can grab your phone and run away.

Keep an eye on children, because today's children, from a very young age (under one year), become so addicted to the phone that they cannot live without it later, and this causes many problems in the future. Give instructions to the girls of the house regarding the phone, and keep an eye on them so that no trouble arises in the coming time. Do not walk holding the phone in your hand; someone might snatch your phone and run away.

Itching

Itching sometimes becomes a physical need for human beings. This phenomenon is also observed and understood in animals, birds, and even plant life. However, there is one thing to observe here: sometimes people scratch themselves in such a way that you feel embarrassed watching them.

Especially those people who are not clean with bathing and washing are commonly seen to have more itching. In certain countries, when those people scratch themselves, they often scratch vigorously in the front or back of their shorts (or underwear). I have seen such people, and their habit causes others to laugh, make fun of them, and disrespect them.

The good thing is that while bathing, one's body should be thoroughly cleaned with soap, and one should take a bath at least once every day, drying thoroughly with a towel. You should use some kind of oil that can provide relief to your front and back areas in various ways, and you will certainly get freedom from itching.

Schoolteachers, parents, and office workers should talk to their companions when they see them scratching and explain to them not to do this. They should definitely give them some knowledge about bathing, maintaining cleanliness, wearing clean clothes, and breaking such habits.

I will not name the countries where this is more prevalent, but I have observed in European countries that only a negligible number of people engage in such behavior. People from Asia, Africa, and poor countries sometimes turn this into a comedy film.

I once went to Germany to watch a hockey match. The Indian team was there. When one team finished playing and the next was starting, there was a break time of about 10-15 minutes, allowing people to move around. I saw in the stadium that many people were scratching in this manner, and the white onlookers were laughing loudly. Watching their hilarious mockery is embarrassing.

Sometimes boils and carbuncles occur due to lack of cleanliness, and some people even get lice, so special care is needed. You should not hesitate to seek medicine, treatment, or a doctor's help when necessary. However, if you have an itch, you should adopt a proper method. Even if you do scratch, you can find relief for yourself by doing so slightly away from the gaze of others. But for those with a clean body and clean clothes, this usually happens rarely. I hope that some people will understand this request of mine and give thought to becoming clean.

Becoming a Role Model

A Role Model is a kind of light that shows a person a path where darkness flees in fear. The stones, pits, mounds, and thorns that lie on the path cannot stop this light; rather, they grant it strength. It is a wonderful thing if a country has people who can show you the path to the nation's and the community's progress.

What you must do to keep your life alive for centuries is to be clean (pure). The country must be clean. A Role Model is exactly this idea. God has blessed every human being with so many gifts—why shouldn't they work hard? They can become a role model for millions of people and play a big part in the welfare of others. They can eliminate the hell of the world.

A person who becomes a Role Model, wherever they bring improvement, their name is discussed and glorified, and they live on for a long time through their services. The parents, family, society, village, and country of the person who becomes a Role Model also gain respect, and their stature generally increases greatly according to their work and means.

Usually, many people are born poor, humble, and in difficult circumstances, but through their dedication and hard work, they become Role Models. People adopt their principles as a way of life. This is possible for you too. Just as Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri Ji, Dr. Manmohan Singh Ji, Shri Narendra Modi Ji, and many other political figures have become Role Models for people.

When you want to become a Role Model, you have to face a struggle. It is possible that many people will create troubles for you during this struggle and will try to pull your legs, but you must keep moving forward with your hard work and dedication, and never accept defeat. One day, the same people who are pulling your legs will consider you their Role Model.

A firm resolve can see the thorns lying on the path, understand them, and sometimes your determination breaks the sharpness of the thorns and replaces that spot with paths covered in flowers. If such people become your Role Models, your future and the future of your country can become bright.

Your faith and truth can certainly grant you success in becoming a Role Model. A country whose people become Role Models in increasing numbers will surely become a progressive country. Keep it in your heart and mind that you want to become a Role Model, and that day will surely come when your thought, hard work, and dedication will certainly make you acknowledged as a Role Model by everyone. The country is clean.

Placing Boards Everywhere

The thing that is visible draws more attention, and according to this principle, there is a need to highlight as much as possible any item that can benefit oneself and society. This applies to any obstacles or needs for improvement on the path of a Clean India. If related issues are placed before the heart and mind, attention will surely be drawn to considering them.

According to this principle, we can advance quickly in making our India, or any other country, clean if we put up information boards about it. First and foremost, it is necessary to place boards alongside all motorways, GT Roads, and heavily traveled routes where people pass, and good things should be written on them so that people's eyes are drawn to them, their attention is captured, and they act upon the message.

In villages, cities, and towns, wherever possible, auspicious messages should be written so that they have some effect on people and bring about good results. The boards should also contain the numbers of agencies where you can get necessary information and other assistance.

I have seen many times, especially in Punjab, India, on the roads, that many places have langar (community kitchens), chhabeel (free sweet drinks), and other types of religious gatherings that attract crowds. When people eat the langar there, they throw the utensils they used right there.

I have seen with my own eyes that in the main Bazaar of Ludhiana, on the GT Road, and on many other roadsides or in villages, wherever langar is served—which is a very good and auspicious work, and a good thought by the people—the mentality of the eaters is to spoil the act after eating, because they throw so many utensils there that it becomes difficult to pass through. I have seen this almost everywhere.

Once, a langar of puris (fried bread) and chholay (chickpeas) was served near Clock Tower in Chaura Bazaar, Ludhiana. After the event, which lasted an hour or two, there was so much filth from disposable plates and plastic utensils that it was difficult to walk. Thousands of utensils were lying on the road.

Yes, if you are going to serve langar, put up a sign that says, "Do not throw empty utensils on the ground," and place bags there where people can discard their utensils.

For some years now, whenever my family and I go to India, we serve langar to the poor and beggars who live in the city. But even there, we tell them, "We have bags. You should put the empty utensils you used in them," and we tell some beggar, "If you see any utensil lying on the ground, pick it up and put it in the bag." We give them 50 rupees for this, and they are also happy with this. This discipline saves the country from filth.

So, every organization should put up boards to raise people's awareness and keep the country clean.

Enemy Friend

God has given instructions for the beings created by God to live a life full of love with each other, and religious scriptures also proclaim this. First and foremost, a human being should gain the wisdom to uphold this tradition, but what is happening? Humans are forgetting these traditions, while animals, birds, and other nature are perhaps earning the praise of the Timeless Being by following these rules.

I saw a documentary on television where a ship was sinking, and a dog fell into the water—it was certain death for the dog. But a dolphin-like fish came there, let the dog climb onto it, and brought it to the shore before leaving it. When the fish was returning, it looked at the dog, appeared happy, and even made some sound.

Such scenes have been seen on TV where a dog, a snake, and a monkey are friends; they cannot live without each other. The monkey sits on the dog, and the monkey wears the snake around its neck like a garland.

Similarly, there are other animals, such as a cow nursing the children of a pig like a mother, or a dog's milk being suckled by a pig, or some other animal sucking the milk of another, proving the existence of motherhood and love.

The mindset of enmity is growing among humans, and lust, anger, greed, attachment, and ego are rising. Nothing here (in terms of material possessions) will go with us, but humans are creating too many enemies and destroying friends because of these material desires. Along with this, humans are also demolishing the blessings of nature.

If there is a true feeling of friendship, it is the worship of God, and it can create heaven and cleanliness (purity) on earth. If you are going to make a friend, do so thoughtfully. Being emotional or trusting quickly is dangerous. If someone has become an enemy and this relationship is going to remain, always keep in mind to be protected from the enemy and never trust them. Carefully consider any apology requested by an enemy, checking for any deception. Many times, people act deceptively in this way.

If a friend is true, believe in them and do not doubt their words. Do such work in society that everyone loves you. Do not do such work that everyone considers you an enemy of society. A person who is a major enemy to society, who poses a threat to the country, should receive punishment according to the law.

Efforts should be made not to take the law into one's own hands. Sometimes it has to be done. In legal cases, the law considers the circumstances, and action is taken—and it should be. It is our feeling that only by understanding the definition of enemy and friend can a person put their clean heart into the service of the country's cleanliness (purity).

Fighting

Fighting (or conflict) is another name for ruin, and whichever families or people have fought, they have never benefited from it. Many people spend their entire lives in jails; their homes, land, and properties are destroyed. Many family members are killed, and the treatment meted out by the police is often very disrespectful. In many countries, the beating by the police leaves the body useless, and daughters and sisters are dishonored. The hardships that daughters, sisters, and girls—whom a person considers their honor and works for their entire life—have to face in police stations are sometimes impossible to write about in books.

Fighting is also a solution to problems, but the solution to problems is generally always possible and successful only through peace. The results seen from fighting until today have generally been ruinous, whether the fight is between countries, between families, or of any other kind. Futures are destroyed in this. An effort should be made, as it only takes a minute or two, to avoid a fight.

It is my life experience that sometimes on the road, while walking, or at home, something happens that causes intense anger, and the foundation for a fight is laid. Once, something similar happened to me: I got so angry that I was pulling the steering wheel of the car so hard that I could have ripped it out. But the person who caused it was going in one direction, and I was going in the other. If we had been going in the same direction, I had so much anger and passion that I don't even know who that person was—a woman or a man—but the outcome would have been nothing less than physically attacking each other; no compromise would have happened. But thank goodness our directions were opposite, and we were not in a position to chase anyone.

Even now, whenever the foundation for a fight is laid, I somehow bring peace and give a form of respect to the opponent. With this, their fighting nature usually changes, and they also bow down and salute. I think that there is no greater scripture in the world than this that can benefit you so much.

Therefore, avoiding fighting and conflict is very essential for the country, for the family, for you, and for a Clean India. Try accepting this request, and you will realize for yourself that this is a very good thing.

Jealousy

Jealousy means being envious of someone else—that they are better than me, more beautiful than me, richer, or stronger—and feeling that I don't like them, or that they shouldn't be like that, or shouldn't be above me. This disease causes great harm, and sometimes leads to your ruin.

A saint once came to a farmer's house, and the farmer served him. When the saint was leaving, he came to the house of the farmer (named Daya in the text) and said, "My son, ask for whatever you want. You have served me." That person replied, "Maharaj, everything I have is a gift from you. Just keep bestowing your grace."

As the saint started to leave, he said, "My son, may you be blessed, and may your neighbors receive more than you do."

The saint left. A few days later, remembering the saint's words, the man thought, "I will ask for a tractor." He asked for a tractor, and a tractor arrived at his house, but two arrived at his neighbors' house. Then he asked for a greater crop yield, and his neighbors received double his yield. Whatever he asked for, his neighbors received double.

He became very jealous. Then he made a request: "O Saint, Hermit, Great Soul, may one of my legs break." His one leg broke, and both of his neighbors' legs broke. This is called jealousy.

The harm caused by this (jealousy) eventually comes to light. However, if love and affection are promoted, it can, at some point, flourish and make both you and your neighbors prosperous. Strengthen brotherhood with love; they will surely be useful to you at some point. And do not commit suicide (literally: raise your heels and hang yourself) out of jealousy towards someone who is strong or prosperous; only you will suffer the loss.

From childhood, show children the way to get rid of jealousy. If possible, bestow this knowledge upon as many people as possible, so that by being prosperous and promoting friendship, the path to creating a clean country will automatically form.

Agreements / Compromises

The word 'agreement' is as beautiful as its benefits are great. Please try to understand its spirit, and many problems of life can be eliminated, leading to the beginning of happiness. If people promote brotherhood among themselves, if they sit down and make agreements instead of fighting, and if every village forms an organization that helps in making compromises during times of trouble, it can be a great benefit to the country.

A compromising spirit in the country always maintains peace. A person with peace and a compromising nature can avoid diseases and can successfully manage many tasks peacefully. A compromising person is not arrogant; they bow down and accept things.

Faith in Gurbani is 100% true; no one can challenge this. Remain calm while making an agreement; do not get agitated, because you are trying to get a good result and avoid difficulties. Whether you suffer a loss or gain a benefit depends only on agreements.

Compromise is the final beneficial path. Armed struggles generally only cause harm. The bad situation between India and Pakistan needs to be resolved somehow. People want peace, and only through agreements will people see good times.

Law

Law is very essential for keeping the conditions of any country pure. Where the laws are good, a positive environment can be created if people understand the law. Law acts as the boundary for a person, an organization, and the country's borders, making it clean (orderly).

Where there is no law or discipline, if everyone follows their own path and has their own laws, there will be a kind of jungle rule. In such a state, the saying "might is right" will prevail, and unrest will always be widespread.

Such a country can never be clean (orderly) where there are laws, but the government and the people have no policy of abiding by them. In Hindustan, the honorable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, who wrote the law and the Constitution, created a very wise, better, and largest Constitution in the world, giving Hindustan very valuable rules. Following these, India is continuously progressing.

Always respect the country's established laws, and thinking that you are a very powerful person by breaking them is a huge mistake. Necessary action should be taken quickly and legally against anyone who breaks the law.

If there is a need to create a law that benefits the country according to necessity, it should be made with a majority vote, or changes should be made according to the majority. Many times, some political people carry the law around in their pockets. Such people should realize that nothing is above the country. The one who serves the country with loyalty is the country's friend, and the one who goes against the country is an anti-national person. Actions should be taken against them. Adhering to the country's law is the only thing that can lead the country toward cleanliness (order and purity).

Diary

"Diary" is an English word that means a notebook in which you can write something. Sometimes, a notebook in which some people write about their daily activities or future plans is also called a diary. Some people have the habit of writing a diary, and if a good diary is written according to rules and a person adheres to good principles, it can show a very good path to others.

My respected teacher, scholar/master Giani Ustad Master Sukhdev Singh Ji, from the village Talwan, who later lived in Ludhiana, taught at Bilga School for perhaps half a century. He was a very sincere and devout Sikh. He was very fond of writing a diary and recorded the essence of every aspect of his life. There was a lot to learn from his diary, but it was found that he had written in the diary that no one else should read it. His son, Sardar Paramjit Singh, told me this.

Due to certain circumstances, Paramjit Ji also passed away a few years after Master Ji, and I don't know where that diary, which could have taught so much, is now. Only the family members can make a decision about it, but I feel that under the circumstances, nothing will be done. A person who reads someone else's written diary without their permission is doing a very wrong thing.

Our Professor Kuldeep Singh Ji came here, and I gave him a diary in which I asked him to write something that could show a path to the world. I hope he wrote something, and I will certainly ask him when we meet again.

Those who believe that their diary is beneficial should somehow publish it so that others can be helped on the path to becoming clean (pure), and we must make the country and the world clean.

Marriage (Viah Shadi)

Marriage is a very important part of a human's life; it is also very essential. The blessing of marriage is attained by humans, but it also has some form of association in other living beings, whose form is very different from that of humans and perhaps beyond human understanding.

Whatever the case, marriage among humans is performed with grandeur and pomp, which probably does not happen among other species. A friend of mine told me that he was lying under a large Neem tree at home, and some parrots came and sat down. About 25-30 parrots were sitting on two branches, close to each other and face-to-face. They sat there for some time, and it seemed as if they were conversing with each other. My friend kept watching them closely and trying to understand.

According to his thinking, they had arranged a marriage ceremony, spoke some words among themselves, and after that, the rest of the parrots flew away, and two parrots remained sitting there. This means their marriage had taken place, and the others had left them. Now, those two had to start their new life.

Such is the relationship among animals that they know how and where to meet again within their family. Then, after some time, those two parrots sitting on the branch also flew away. The conclusion seems to be that their marriage happened.

Similarly, there are other natural marriages, and marriage is necessary for the next generation. Even saints, great souls, Gurus, Pirs, and hermits do not place restrictions on marriage in large numbers.

In human marriages in the past, marriages took place at a young age, and parents performed such duties. Then the pace of this process changed until it reached the present circumstances, and according to the circumstances, every matter is right in its own place. There is also a different voice in European countries, and that, too, is correct in its place.

Whatever it is, marriage and such relationships are precious. It is very essential to understand their value and uphold them. However, if your marriages reach a point, under certain circumstances, where they cannot be sustained, then instead of taking any destructive step, it is better to resolve the issue amongst yourselves or through the court and choose new paths. Some people reach the point of fighting, quarreling, and even murder in such situations. There is a need to protect against these things.

It is hoped that by accepting this request, if the custom of upholding marriages is successful as much as possible, then such relationships can become pure (clean) for the country. Eloping and getting married, and thereby troubling parents or tarnishing their honor, is not a very good thing. When such relationships later turn into regret, they create many kinds of difficulties and troubles. If the administration strictly enforces the law regarding this, there are many benefits.

Performing marriages according to religious rites and traditions is a very good thing. With this, you can also be grateful to God that God has given us permission to form a good relationship.

Maa'ghe Kaddhne（Vocal Expression／War Cry）

In every country and society, some distinct customs develop, the manifestation of which is seen through your habits, displays, and expressions. Among these, some are good and some are bad, some are benevolent and some are harmful, and some become customs of respect and others of disrespect.

Among these, one custom in Hindustan is 'Maa'ghe Kaddhne.' This involves making a sound by quickly tapping a finger on the lips while producing a long, high-pitched vocalization, making a "bubb, bubb, bubb..." sound. The meaning is generally that it has historically been done in happiness, or to challenge someone and signal a fight.

In other countries, a slightly altered version of this is common, particularly among women in several African countries, where they do this at weddings or to express joy, or with some other special emotion. In our country, or in Pakistan, this custom is generally most prevalent in Punjabi culture.

It has no major benefit. It can make the listener, or someone with whom you have a minor dispute, think that you are challenging them to a fight. This is where a quarrel begins, which sometimes leads to excessive damage and even deaths.

A person who engages in 'Maa'ghe Kaddhne' is not considered good by society, and sometimes the entire village gathers and reports the person to the police, resulting in a case being filed. This often leads to police torture after arrest, waste of money, and major losses due to getting entangled in legal cases.

Generally, 'Maa'ghe Kaddhne' happens after consuming alcohol. And if someone starts doing it back at you, understand that a fight cannot be avoided. You already know what the result of a fight is.

Sometimes young men do this after drinking alcohol, and family members should stop them. If something like this does happen, wise people should resolve the matter instead of escalating it, and advise those who engage in 'Maa'ghe Kaddhne' not to do so. It is essential for the welfare of society that this dispute is settled within the community before it reaches the police station.

The problems should first be resolved by sitting down among family members, or then through the Panchayat (village council).

Song and Music

Every being in the world is connected to music in some form. Music has many different forms, and every country has music that is somewhat different from other countries, but the spirit of music is one throughout the world, in which it expresses its sorrows, joys, happiness, or grief.

Sometimes we do not understand the music of another country or other people, but we feel its emotion, and sometimes we like it so much that despite not understanding it, a person starts swaying or dancing to it. I have seen some songs and music from India or other countries that I have seen white people (Europeans/Westerners) dancing to.

Song and music have been known for centuries, and its beginning started when creation began; only its form might have been different at that time. Rivers, streams, and nature are all connected with music, but it is not within the capacity of every person to understand it. In my opinion, it is by observing this (nature) that the world later connected with music.

You know that the sage Narad Muni Ji, who lived long ago, also had a musical instrument in his hand with which he would sing and give messages to many through music. Music is a very precious emotion, and the support it can offer is extremely valuable.

Nowadays, almost every person in India loves music, and the number of singers is also increasing. There have been great advances in musical technology, and many singers from India are serving or have served, earning a very high reputation in the world. India has a high name in music, and many foreigners also come here to learn music.

Our request is that everyone should certainly love music, and there is some music that you can listen to with your eyes closed, feeling as if you have reached a place in the world where there is only peace and the dwelling of God.

In the music of some countries, there is a lot of noise and uproar, but there are also many people who engage in its practice or dance energetically, and people also like it. It would be a good thing for us to like music, respect it, and contribute something good to it.

The emperors of music, Tansen Ji, Baba Mardana Ji, Bhimsen Joshi Ji, and other great musical pioneers have existed, listening to whom it feels as if there is nothing higher than this. The late Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan was also an emperor in the world of music, and his respect became history in the world.

Music can play a huge role in making any country, human, animal, bird, or nature clean (pure), and the world acknowledges the excellence of Indian music.

Decorating the Home

Decorating the home, meaning making it beautiful, is part of every effort and emotion a person has to look attractive in their life, especially women, who are ahead of men in this matter. Just as humans put effort into making themselves look beautiful, they can also decorate their homes by focusing on making the house beautiful.

No matter what, even if a house is small, if it is decorated, it has a different appeal and joy. A friend of mine wears pressed coats and pants when he goes out, but in one room of his house, he had stored fuel wood, dung cakes, and in the second room, he had four or five cots laid out with a goat tied to a leg, which was defecating everywhere. Do not let your home conditions become like this.

The house where you live, the office where you work, the factory where you earn a living, the car or bus from which you earn your daily bread, the vehicle you ride to travel far and wide—keep all life-related things clean like your home. If a home is clean, it becomes a cause for countless diseases to stay away, or if you keep it clean, disease has less effect. Filth gives birth to diseases and creates conflict. God also prefers cleanliness.

Create a place for everything in the house and keep it in its proper place, and always pay attention to the cleanliness of the house. Creating a mess in the house turns it into a hell.

A person from Holland, Karnataka, who worked in the office of the Steel King Lakshmi Mittal, came to me for two or three months. He rented a room from me and showed me a photo that he had received an award from the President. Later, when he left, he didn't even inform me, but since I had the key to the room, when I opened it after several days, there was not a single spot in that room where there was no garbage. If he brought something from outside to eat, he threw the wrapper right there; if a box was empty, he threw it there; if he ate some fruit, he threw the peel there. There was no place to set foot in that room, and I was very surprised that such people exist in the world—a person who says he received an award from the President. If anyone asks me, I would say that he might be the dirtiest person in the world. Such people can neither keep themselves nor the country clean.

Even if your house's courtyard is small, if you don't have space to plant fruit trees or large plants, bring small pots and plant some small plants or flowers in them, or you can sow some vegetables. The prestige of the house increases.

Be sure to arrange for water drainage in the courtyard; this is not a difficult job, and an underground pipe can be installed, which can bring you many kinds of benefits. Do not store fuel wood, dung cakes, or cow dung inside the courtyard. If you must store them, there should be a special arrangement so that it does not affect the rest of your house.

Sometimes, due to compulsions, you might have to tether animals, but if you have the sense to maintain cleanliness, the negative effects will be reduced. There are millions of other ways to manage the house, and by implementing those rules, the house and the country can be made clean. Promise that we will take care of these things.

Work-Shy (Kaam Chor)

"Work-shy" means someone who diverts their attention from work and, instead of doing the job, procrastinates and slips away—meaning they don't work. The number of such people in India is quite high. Due to good economic conditions, there is no worry about food. People hire servants and do not work themselves.

In reality, even these people should work, but due to their pride or possession of wealth, they prefer to stay away from work. They will lie down at home but won't work. If someone does this in foreign countries, they suffer extreme losses.

Do not make yourself work-shy; this will ruin your life. Always do your work on time, and do not fall behind by becoming work-shy. This causes work to pile up, and time will not come back to join you. Being work-shy is harmful economically, socially, religiously, and in every aspect. If the label "work-shy" gets attached to you, understand that you will also face problems in society.

Show the people related to you that you are serious about work. By elevating your status as a serious person, if you can give proof to those connected with you that you are hardworking, they will respect you, and this will only benefit you.

For people who have the 'disease' of being work-shy, family members can slowly change them by teaching them the basic lesson—try to make them sensible. Slowly, like in a school, like parrots, we can teach them to speak (the language of work).

Some people still do not get rid of this disease because, sometimes, parents make some children like this at home, and they are unwilling to work. But later on, their own life suffers the loss. If someone becomes excessively work-shy and does not listen, then if a little harsh discipline (literally: light hitting with shoes/slapping) is required, then, according to the circumstances, one should not hesitate (to apply light physical correction).

If the importance of work is explained to children according to the nature of the work, then they will never become work-shy in their future lives. Only then can the country become clean (productive and prosperous).

Honesty

Millions of virtues and vices accompany the lives of beings on Earth. Among these, we have had the opportunity to describe honesty here. Staying honest is difficult but also very important. Whatever the case, honesty ultimately brings good results, but with the end of honesty, people's troubles will increase, and the world will move towards destruction. Everyone needs to understand that staying honest is very essential for life and for any country.

Honesty benefits not only humans but all living beings. Because the human form of life is supreme, the honesty of beings related to it comes to the forefront more, and the blessings that result from this cannot be obtained at any other price. Therefore, a human being should live their life by being the most honest. There are many related teachings, and adopting them brings blessings into life.

An honest person, regardless of their circumstances, is known for their peacefulness and special status. Obstacles arise on the path of honesty; sometimes one has to undertake great struggles. The honest person has to pass through great tests, and ultimately, truth prevails.

In schools, colleges, and generally, there should be special discussions, teachings, and training regarding honesty, so that people can learn something and honesty can increase. If you find something that is not yours, try to return it or try to find the person it belongs to so that they can get it back. If you are unsuccessful, you will gain a lot by giving proof of your honesty through other possible means.

If the majority of the world's people become honest, the world can become largely free of conflict. The disrespect of humanity that is happening today can be corrected. The country needs honest leaders. Leaders entangled in corruption cases, quarrelsome, and dishonest should not be the country's leaders. If bad people are in politics, they will plunder the country. Their only objective is their chair.

Narrate stories of honesty to children and other family members and inspire them to be honest. If possible, stage a small play to test their honesty. God is always pleased with honesty. The country that has honesty can be a clean (pure/upright) country.

Photo

A photo is a means of identification, and you should certainly have your picture taken. The practice of making photos has been going on for many decades. Earlier, photos were made as paintings, sculptures, or on iron or metal, but the progress of time has now changed so much.

If possible, take photos of your organization, your family, and your children; they can be of benefit to you at some point and help keep memories fresh. To take a photo, you need a good camera, a good craftsman (photographer), and a good location. Choose correctly according to the circumstances and necessity, and take the photo.

Do not waste time and money beating the air (making useless efforts). Some men are fond of having their pictures taken constantly, and some have a hobby of taking hundreds of photos in a single day. They unnecessarily get photos taken everywhere, obstructing things (literally: getting their leg stuck) to take pictures. This hobby is not very good.

Take or get photos taken for work, or those that can be useful to you in some way. Create a persona (status) such that people with cameras contact you to take your picture. This will raise the name of you, your family, and your society.

Many people fill their houses by taking photos, and I have seen many who frame too many photos and put them up all over the walls. One or two photos or a number around that is fine, but putting up excessive photos is not beneficial.

A man who was somewhat financially weak, and he himself was partly the reason for his weakness, I once gave him ₹5,000 at a time when, according to my estimation, the value of that five thousand in 2025 would surely be equivalent to ₹50-60. His appearance and stature were not that great, nor did he hold any such position, nor did he have a great personality. But after I returned from India, he squandered that money and also got several large photos of himself framed and hung them in his house.

When I went again, he was very happy showing me those photos. I couldn't figure out whether to scold him, laugh, or cry. A person who doesn't even have this much sense that these photos won't give you food—it would have been better if you had bought necessary items for your home, that would have been right—but who can explain things to people?

Nowadays, cameras have come in telephones, and you can take digital photos in minutes and seconds. Do not fill your camera with unnecessary photos. In my opinion, you should only take necessary photos that are useful to you or can benefit you in some way. You need to learn some photo-taking techniques; not everyone can take a good photo. If you learn some techniques, many of your tasks can be improved, and you can even make it your profession. You can help make the country clean (prosperous) by eliminating poverty.

Yoga

In ancient times in Hindustan (India), sages, in order to keep their lives and bodies in high spirits, to concentrate their attention, and to attain samadhi (deep meditative state), went into the jungles and mountains and practiced spiritual disciplines and created asanas (postures) for a long time without eating or drinking. And these were very successful.

These people were known by the names of Yogi, Saint, Pir, and Great Soul. Seeing the benefits of these asanas, time has bestowed upon this practice the name of 'Yoga' or 'Yogic Discipline' (Adheen Adhak Joge), and other similar names are also given.

You should definitely practice Yoga. Learn it from a good master, or nowadays, a great deal of knowledge about it is given on television or YouTube. This will increase health, keep diseases away, and you will certainly benefit from it in every way.

If you have the right clothes and a suitable place for Yoga, the benefits are even greater. Generally, clean, tidy places, grassy areas, a seashore, under trees, and other suitable locations are usually available to you. Along with Yoga, if attention is paid to the instructions given by the master and the diet, health can remain even better. Doing Yoga and eating the wrong diet can result in less benefit and more harm.

Yoga is a panacea (cure-all) not only for men but also for women, children, and the elderly. Anyone can do it. In some places, animals, birds, and other living beings of nature have also been recognized as practicing Yoga in some form or another.

Common people should perform the easy asanas of Yoga. Doing difficult and challenging asanas carries the risk of damaging the body; it is better not to do these in the beginning.

Some people living abroad who do not know about Yoga, when they see people doing Yoga—how they are twisting themselves upside down and moving their legs and arms this way and that—they laugh. But those people who know about Yoga are willing to pay a lot of money and make time for Yoga, thus benefiting their bodies and maintaining their health. A healthy body is a clean (pure) country.

Assembly／Gathering（Mehfil）

A 'Mehfil' means gathering a group of people and holding some event of joy and prosperity within it. This can include songs, music, poetry, recitations, plays, dramas, or some other similar activity. These events are generally held for entertainment, for the increase of knowledge, or to give a message to the people.

Assemblies for entertainment should continue to be held, and society should understand the path to welfare. Security arrangements should be proper in the assemblies, because some people, using weapons, alcohol, hooliganism, and fighting, can spoil your well-prepared event. Assemblies are held for happiness, but people with bad intentions sometimes turn joy into sorrow, which is a very base thought.

In the assemblies, it is good if separate spaces are arranged for men and women in some countries, but in some countries, this makes no difference because the people there are sensible and understand these things. The best seating arrangement for assemblies is to use chairs, spread out mats (daris), or set up tents.

Depending on the weather and circumstances, arrangements for water or langar (community food) are also commonly made in Punjab. Generally, programs with obscenity should be avoided in assemblies, and the assembly should be held within a cultural framework, as this is how people are more affected.

Assemblies based on culture are held from time to time. This promotion should continue, and the administration/government should intervene and further encourage them. This has a good effect on cleanliness (societal purity/order).

Old／Extra Items

Generally, life runs smoothly and well in homes, and sometimes in those homes, there are items that are still fine but have become old for the residents. Nowadays, some processes have started where if you buy a new item, they will take your old one. But if you have the means, make a poor person in need happy by giving them your old items.

These items—some utensils, some clothes, some household cupboards, trunks, boxes, etc.—whatever they may be, donate them with a big heart. Here in Europe and abroad, people often place things they don't need outside on the sidewalk. This sometimes includes perfectly good items, and people in need pick them up and take them away.

Once I was passing by, and some office had put four or five computers outside. I couldn't stop the car there. When I turned the car around and came back, it took me some time, more than 10 minutes, and by then, someone had picked up those computers.

People often put out all kinds of items like televisions, utensils, clothes, sofas, beds, and stoves. They only place them outside on the day when it is allowed. You cannot place them every day and at all times. Countries where such rules are made automatically become a Clean India (Swachh Bharat).

If you have extra items, there are some large shops here that sell very cheap goods and take your extra items, even coming to your home. They take the items from you for a negligible fee or free of charge, and they sell them very cheaply, where a good item can be found for 15-20% of the original price as needed.

So, you should put your extra items to good use, and their home will surely become clean (organized). This is with your help, and you suffer no loss in it. It is with this spirit that the country will become clean.

Sleeping and Waking

Sleeping and waking are essential for every living thing, but their forms are different. For instance, you can see a waking entity, but everything on Earth also sleeps in some form, though it is not easy for humans to understand this. For example, regarding the ocean, trees, fruits, flowers, animals, birds, and even the wind—I have heard from the wise that when the wind is still, it is asleep. Those who do not believe these things have their own perspective, but these claims, made by science and wise people, are not false.

Sleeping and waking are necessities for health, and only with them does life proceed along its path. Some people sleep for 18 to 20 hours out of 24, and their bodies fall victim to various kinds of difficulties. In my opinion, a person needs at least eight hours of sleep, and it doesn't matter if it fluctuates a little; sleeping too little is also harmful to the body.

The relationship between sleeping and waking is linked to the bed. It is a very good thing if your bed is comfortable. A dirty and uncomfortable bed creates problems and diseases for you and is an obstacle to rest.

When you go as a guest to someone's house, you should be thoughtful about sleeping there and not just do as you please. It is essential to adopt the rules of that house. We went to India, and a close acquaintance took us to his in-laws' house. We went and sat in the sitting room, and that person left us and went inside. When an hour and a half passed, we asked his in-laws where their son-in-law was. They said, "He has gone inside and is asleep." What name would you give such people? We did not even know his in-laws, and you can imagine how we must have passed the time at someone else's house there.

Some people go and sleep outside on the grass, fields, or in parks. Sleeping like this is generally not right because many small creatures can harm you, and usually, it is not permitted in many parks. However, some people who are compelled and poor spend their time or rest by going there, taking such a posture, and sleeping.

We went to Jalandhar to meet a police officer who was six and a half feet tall. He treated us with good respect and offered some service, but my colleague who went with me slept about five or six times while sitting in front of the police officer. I had to nudge his foot with mine to wake him up. We stayed there for about an hour and a half, and I felt very ashamed that there are people who are so careless about sleep and do not even consider where they are sitting. I have seen many other people who are like this. People commonly fall asleep while sitting on a bus or a train.

If you are driving and feel sleepy, be sure to drink some tea or water, splash water on your eyes, and take a short walk outside in the cold air. I hope you will certainly understand some of my instructions.

Summer and Winter

In different countries, regions, and islands, two seasons are predominant—namely, summer and winter—but the number of seasons is still greater than this. There are some countries where only summer prevails, and some where only winter remains.

With cold, the ground is moist and the water content is somewhat higher, but in the summer, the heat affects the water. Both seasons are very essential for human life. However, it is commonly observed that when it is cold in Europe, the cold is sometimes so intense that water poured outside freezes, but the summer is only for a short period. Or, in some parts of Europe, the heat is intense for a longer time, like in India, where people from other environments go to enjoy holidays and have fun.

Cold brings countless benefits, and the crops that ripen in the heat are also helpful in sustaining human life. Science has made many inventions. In the summer, people protect themselves from the heat with the convenience of cool air, coolers, fans, and air conditioning. In winter, people use heaters or warm clothes to guard against the cold.

Even with these comforts, there is a great need to follow the weather conditions, otherwise, various diseases or damages can occur. Especially where it snows, and the snow freezes due to the cold, it becomes difficult to walk on. Many people slip and fall, and cars also go out of your control. They slip, and various kinds of damage occur.

In Europe, there are very special arrangements for taking care of these things. When it has snowed, they have some vehicles that have a kind of plow attached to the front, and they clear the snow where it is needed for traffic. A machine that sprinkles salt then salts the road, which prevents the snow from freezing and provides relief in various ways.

In some countries, mosquitoes increase in the summer, and there is a need to be protected from these mosquitoes. You need to protect yourself by using certain tools or mosquito nets, otherwise, malaria or some other diseases can surround you, which can cause harm.

Finally, I say that if the heat is high, there is a need to move forward by following the rules specific to the heat, and if the cold is high, by following the rules specific to the cold, otherwise, various kinds of damage can occur. Adherence to rules can make any country healthy.

Gift

Giving a gift is a good tradition. With it, we express love, strengthen relationships, and weave them into a thread of affection and devotion. The act of giving a gift turns the atmosphere and circumstances into happiness, creating special moments. Everyone present there enjoys the pleasant atmosphere for that time and forgets their sorrows. This is a good custom created by our world; may this practice continue forever, God willing.

Give a gift that leads to an increase in knowledge, progress in life, recognition of social values, helps one become righteous, increases love for humanity, and so on.

When giving a gift, one needs to pay attention to the saying, "stretch your legs according to your sheet." Some people stretch their legs beyond the sheet and suffer losses. Some people give gifts by borrowing money from others, going beyond their means. This should never be done. If you do not have the means or your circumstances do not permit, you should express to the person you wish to give a gift to that you are unable to afford an expensive gift.

Straining oneself (literally: lifting one's heels and putting in effort) to gain false fame is wrong. Some people do not do anything very beneficial or useful by giving gifts of alcohol bottles, obscene films, provocative clothing, bad books, and other useless items.

Everyone has their own circumstances, but I think giving a gift of a book, a piece of knowledge, something beneficial, or something necessary is a good thing.

There are some people who will ask you what gift you will give them. Such people can never benefit you, and try to protect yourself from such people, or else they can cause you various kinds of harm.

Many people nowadays are in a situation where they can barely make ends meet, yet they have started celebrating the birthdays of small children, in which they feel like they are standing in line with rich people and want to follow the customs and practices of the wealthy.

It is great if you celebrate your children's birthdays, but if your financial condition is not good, then the husband, wife, grandparents, etc., can sit down—just four or five people—pray at home, and celebrate. Gathering people from here and there to celebrate birthdays, taking gifts, and giving gifts causes various kinds of damage to you.

Do not mock a gift given by someone, even if it is not very expensive or does not meet your expectations.

If possible, give gifts of medicines and essential items to poor people, as God can be very pleased with this. When giving gifts to children, do not buy dangerous things like toy pistols, toy swords, or other toy weapons.

Misleading

Misleading someone is a great sin, and bestowing knowledge is a great virtue. Now you have to decide which one holds more importance for you, because some people are happy by misleading someone, and some people are happy by showing someone the right path.

Whatever you say, if a human always works for the flourishing of humanity, a healthy society can be created. It is natural that neither 100% truth can be spread, nor 10% falsehood. This truth and falsehood are bound to continue. In this short life, the value of the gift of love should be recognized and practiced; there is nothing greater than this.

Never mislead anyone. The person who is misled suffers great damage. I remember this incident was around 1975. We were traveling on a tractor during the rainy season. The road we were on was unpaved, not far from our village, and we were heading towards Bilga. The potholes and ditches on the dirt roads were filled with water.

Further ahead, two people we knew were walking. They were ordinary farmers, but they did consume doda (opium pods). We knew them, so my friend who was driving the tractor stopped it next to them and asked them to hop on the tractor. The poor fellows stood behind the driver on the tractor, thinking they could avoid the water and proceed towards Bilga.

My friend, as I mentioned, was very mischievous. He started driving, and those people were standing behind him. Wherever the water came, that mischievous friend would speed up the tractor and suddenly lower the front end (the driver's side), and the poor men's clothes would instantly get soaked with the dirty rainwater. When the road became dry, he would immediately raise the front so high that they couldn't get off. They shouted at him to let them off, but he paid no attention to their pleas.

He did not let them get off at Bilga, and now their faces and heads were smeared with mud. We laughed looking at them, but the friend driving the tractor pretended that he couldn't hear anything they were saying. He dropped them off outside the market and we drove on. Their clean clothes were ruined, and they were brothers who were probably going to see a relative. They were no longer fit to go there, and what happened to them was very bad.

Later, we found out that they were the real maternal uncles of our very close friend, which saddened us greatly. But my friend or I should not have done that. I regret it today.

We should teach our children not to be misled and not to mislead anyone. This is not a good deed for the status of the country.

Weapon

The word 'weapon' is perhaps made up of two words: Hath (Hand) + Yaar (Friend). This means that if a person has a weapon, it can be their greatest yaar (friend), companion, or partner. Worldly friends, relatives, and family members cannot always be with you; if a weapon is in your hand, it is a friend. Always use it correctly.

Indian people are quite fond of keeping weapons. A weapon is not a bad thing, but consider it a friend, and never have the intention of using it for hooliganism, mischief, or committing atrocities.

In Europe and other countries, there are rules for keeping weapons, and in many countries, you cannot keep them. If you ask the police, they say that they are there to protect you, and you do not need a weapon.

Never keep it loaded. If it is loaded, take full care of its safety lock. A person with a weapon must have complete knowledge about it, because if you lack information, you can harm anyone with the weapon.

There are certain rules that every armed person needs to learn. One of these rules is that when holding a weapon, its muzzle should generally not face any person. It is possible that the weapon might discharge in some manner, and it could take someone's life.

Illegal weapons, which are against the rules, are banned by the government, but in every country, some people keep illegal weapons with them. Sometimes they need them, and sometimes they keep them secretly for protection or to commit wrongdoings.

Children should be kept away from weapons and should not be allowed to touch them. However, you should still give them knowledge about weapons, so that they don't secretly pick up a weapon and harm themselves.

Get your weapons checked on time, and there should be a special place to keep them. Never be careless about a weapon. Roaming around with weapons or misusing them can cause great harm to ourselves.

Never give your licensed weapon to anyone else, or they might commit a crime, and your name could be implicated, landing you in trouble.

Kachha (Underwear)

The Kachha (underwear) falls under the essential clothing items for a human because it helps in the care of your necessary private organs. Some people pick up and wear someone else's kachha. This is a very wrong thing and should not be done. One should wear a clean kachha every day. Wash your own kachha yourself. You should have at least five to seven kachhas readily available.

When some people's kachha wears out, they start using it inside the house as a cleaning cloth, considering it fabric for domestic work. This is a very dirty and wrong thing. If the kachha is in such a condition, it should be thrown away.

Wash the kachha and put it out to dry. Do not put it in the kitchen or your room; put it in a suitable place. The Kachha (Kachhera) of Amritdhari Sikhs is large, and it needs proper attention according to traditions, which should be done as per custom.

The kachha should be soft and cotton, but nowadays, many ready-made kachhas from China and India are available in the market, which are quite cheap and light.

Kanga (Comb)

A comb (Kanga) is an item for combing the hair on the head, made of wood, plastic, iron, ivory, or some other material. It is used to comb the hair on the head or the beard so that they can be neat.

In India, a wooden comb is prescribed for Amritdhari Sikhs, and they are permitted to keep it tucked in their hair. They must comb their hair twice a day with this wooden comb, which is very beneficial for the health of the scalp. After combing, if some hairs are stuck in it, some people throw the hair in the dustbin, but some people take care of them, collect them, and then cremate them (dispose of them respectfully) after two, four months, or a year.

Try not to use someone else's comb. Even when going to a relative's house, take your own comb and other necessary items with you. Generally, a comb is not very expensive. Get your own separate comb and always keep it carefully

Bedding (Bistara)

Bedding holds a very important relationship with a person's life because a human spends approximately 40-50% of their life in bed, from childhood until the end. Your bedding should be as comfortable and good as possible, commensurate with your means. The pillow in the room should also be proper so that your neck gets adequate rest.

In summer, you need a thin blanket or quilt for bedding, and a warm one in winter. In some places where there are poor people, they do not have good bedding. If you have the capacity, it would be a very virtuous act to buy them new bedding, which is not very expensive, or give them your old bedding.

Always keep your bedding clean, and if the bedding is not needed, gather it up and store it, or place a cover over it so that it remains protected from dust and dirt.

Before getting into bed, your body should not be covered in dirt and dust; go after bathing. Your feet and the clothes you wear for sleeping in bed should also be clean.

In hot countries and homes built in fields, be sure to shake out your bedding before sleeping, as some insect or bug might have crept into it. It is very essential to air the bedding in the sun from time to time; this helps in maintaining health.

Some people have a habit of getting into anyone's bed they wish, but aware people never get into someone else's bed. However, whenever a guest comes to your house, give them clean bedding, and after they leave, be sure to wash the sheet and the quilt cover, etc.

Place naphthalene balls (farnail) or similar items among the stored bedding in the house so that it retains a pleasant smell. Your bedding should not smell of sweat; always take care of this. Sometimes, lice fall into the bedding; the cause of this is lack of cleanliness. One should pay attention to this or try to get rid of them using some kind of medicine.

Brush (Toothbrush)

The brush, which is exclusively for cleaning the teeth, should always be your own. You should never use another person's brush.

While brushing, first apply a normal amount of toothpaste (colgate), wet it with water, and scrub your teeth for at least two to three minutes—on the top, bottom, and inner sides. Do not swallow the resulting foam, and then rinse your mouth thoroughly with water. Then, brush again to properly remove any residual toothpaste from the inside of your mouth; this way, your teeth will become clean.

Next, rub the brush on your tongue. If possible, take your old brush, cut the worn-out bristles to make them stiff, so that it can properly scrub your tongue and completely clean off the whitish substance coating it.

After brushing, clean your brush thoroughly and keep it in a suitable place. Some people place the brush near where they brush, leaving it exposed to dust and dirt. I have seen some people hang the brush on the back side of the toilet pot. This should not be done. It is very essential to care for the brush.

If the brush wears out and its bristles become splayed, you need to change the brush because it is no longer effective for cleaning. Share the knowledge about brushing with others, and especially urge all your family members to brush every day, and brush once before sleeping as well.

Some people use datan (a stick used for brushing) from the Kikar, Tahli, Eucalyptus (Safaida), or Neem trees instead of a toothbrush. This is also correct in some form, but its use, like the brush, must be done correctly for successful cleaning.

Towel

A towel is very essential for body cleanliness, and this towel should necessarily be made of cotton cloth. After bathing, first wring the water from your body with your hands, and then thoroughly wipe yourself with the towel.

Your towel should always be clean, and do not use someone else's towel. I have commonly seen in families that there is only one towel, and the entire family uses it to clean their bodies. Sometimes, after washing hands before eating, all family members dry their hands with the towel that was used to clean the body after bathing. This is wrong. Try to ensure that every member has their own separate towel, as towels are not very expensive, nor do they wear out quickly.

After bathing, the towel should be put out to dry, and only a dry towel should be used; that is proper. When you go to someone's house as a guest, take your own towel and all bathing items with you.

Do not carelessly throw your towel around the house; it will be better if you create a special place for it. If you want to give a gift to someone and you feel they have a shortage of towels, just give them a towel, and it will be useful to them.

Do not wipe utensils with your bathing towel, nor use it for kitchen work. In our house, the hand-drying towel in the kitchen is separate, the utensil-wiping towel is separate, the bathing towel is separate, the towel in the washroom is separate, the table-cleaning towel is separate, and the towel for wiping furniture in the house is separate. According to health principles, if you can also manage a similar system, do so and become clean (hygienic) yourself.

Decision

Every person has to make many decisions in life. Life does not move forward without decisions. The request is that no decision should be made without thinking, impulsively, in anger, or by being misled by someone. Do not make decisions out of suspicion, or against the country, society, or humanity. Such decisions can prove very harmful.

Try not to consider any decision as a line drawn in stone, because keeping time and circumstances in mind, sometimes changing some decisions benefits humanity, and nurturing humanity is the greatest religion of mankind.

If possible, while making a decision, pay attention to the guidance of your parents, good friends, teachers, religious leaders, religious scriptures, and the wise. Then, a good result will emerge. Always remember the results of good decisions; if possible, write them down and connect them with your life. Let others experience their benefits as well. Good decisions play a very important role in creating a good society.

Make the big decision in life that you must remain religious, remember the favors of your parents, and serve them, but parents should also maintain their own dignity.

Many customs regarding the marriages of children have changed. Children should not hide their feelings from their parents, and should not enter into any relationship without their blessings. Parents should also be mindful. Decisions made outside the purview of parents generally only lead to sorrow. Do not make any decision that makes your parents look false in front of their relatives.

National and international decisions for the country are made by sitting in the Cabinet and Parliament and are passed according to the law. No high-ranking official should display their dominance.

Many decisions have to be made in a family. If a decision is made under the supervision of elders, it is beneficial, because their life experience can only lead to good decisions. If you do not understand something while making a decision, clarify it again. Misunderstandings should not remain.

Pretence/Show-off

Nature is also marvelous; the nature created by God is very beautiful. A person is amazed by its colors and ways, and by getting caught up in these spectacles, they sometimes forget the true purpose of their life.

To make the reality of human life appear superior to the natural principle, a person uses all sorts of colors and ways to create a show; this is called pretence. To live within the will of nature is to not pretend. The consequences that arise from pretending are not hidden.

Man is the chief among all beings, but animals, birds, and other creatures might also pretend in their own ways, but it would surely be less than man. A person who accepts the Will of God does not pretend; they remain satisfied with what God has given them. There is no gift equal to the gifts of God; it is wisdom to remain content with them and keep thanking the Almighty.

Pretence should be done very thoughtfully; it is possible that its effect could be reversed, leading to a great loss for you. Many people, especially those who stretch their legs beyond their sheet (live beyond their means) or those who put on an act to show themselves as superior to their status, or those who think of themselves as more beautiful than reality, try to show themselves as having ascended to the sky by using beauty parlors, makeup, or clothes. This proves to be wrong and harmful because they eventually have to come back down to earth. This is not my criticism that you should not wear makeup, but stay away from false notions. The real remains real, and the fake remains fake.

Many people use borrowed items to show off, such as clothes, jewelry, or a vehicle. Do not escalate this beyond limits, because you may face embarrassment when the truth comes out.

If any of your loved ones is suffering from this "disease" (of showing off), you must give them medicine. Especially from childhood, give them a good lesson, or at any age, there is a need to make them aware of the reality.

Pretending to be rich is dangerous. If someone commits a social injustice or atrocity against you, and you are compelled to make a display (protest), first seek permission from the authority (discipline), then prepare an outline with your organization, and start the work with full preparation. The effort should be for things to be done peacefully, and to avoid harm to yourself and the country. Also, beware of mischievous people who light a fire and run away, which can cause a lot of our property to be burnt to ashes. The loss can be very great.

Where your protests do not affect the authorities, then take legal action and avoid fighting, quarrels, and armed conflict as much as possible. When all paths fail, according to the command of the revered Guru, Sri Guru Gobind Singh Ji, taking up arms is justified. However, it must also be remembered that the sword should not be used to commit tyranny.

A Line on Stone

Some people, out of pride, arrogance, and conviction, declare that what they say is "a line on stone," meaning it cannot be changed. But thinking this way is not right. A person's thought process must change easily, or for the sake of humanity or worldly welfare, according to the time and circumstances.

This is not a bad thing; anything that cannot be changed is dangerous. In ancient times, many things were carved as lines on stone, but time has changed them too. So, please pay attention to this.

Never make pronouncements of a "line on stone" decision in a rush of enthusiasm, anger, or emotion, because this is always a very severe decision. If a person makes a decision and cannot fulfill it, their conscience remains troubled.

A "line on stone" is a very big claim. Sometimes, such promises have to be changed for the sake of welfare. And do not make the lines of life so deep that you ever make a claim like "a line on stone."

If your rules are "a line on stone," then analyze whether they are beneficial or harmful to the world. If it is your misunderstanding, then humbly accept it and change the "line on stone" decision.

Do not impose your rules on others; this will bring you much trouble and loss. "A line on stone" is generally a symbol of arrogance and thinking of oneself as superior. This impedes the progress of development.

Many people do not support those who consider themselves "a line on stone," because they (the rigid people) want to stick to their own stubborn ways (literally: keep a splinter in their hip). Society does not like to listen to their dissonant tune.

Many young boys and girls, out of innocence, make promises of love like a "line on stone," promising to stand by each other, but these lines often fade away with time. Therefore, any decision that is made into "a line on stone" should always be done thoughtfully.

Some children also trouble their parents by calling their decisions "a line on stone" in front of them, taking advantage of their parents' compulsions and the weakness of relationships. But such people never find happiness in life.

Death is a line on stone; it is bound to come one day. And then some marks remain, which also fade away with time.

Institution/Organization

An Institution (Sanstha) means a collective organization formed by a group of people. It is generally created to carry out shared tasks and for welfare activities. Although much changes with time, and the spirit of an institution also changes according to circumstances, its main agenda should remain that of global welfare if that was its core sentiment.

An individual person cannot do much; they need the help of other people. This is why the need for institutions remains constant for social people. Whatever the case, society definitely needs institutions, and we pray that only good institutions are formed.

Institutions should only be created for good and welfare-oriented work. But it should not be that institutions are formed and then they spread poison in the world and commit the murder of humanity.

The names of institutions should be very good, because a person first hears the name, and then their thoughts are shaped accordingly. When forming institutions, the existence of God must definitely be kept in mind, as those institutions that are created selfishly, without faith in God, eventually perish.

In institutions, where young people are included, elders should also be included, because the experience of the elders can surely show a good path. Every institution's work should have a constitution, and work should only be done by taking guidance from the constitution.

The people working in the institution should be soft-spoken, knowledgeable, and sensible individuals. Any institution that keeps itself away from fighting and disputes will always have peace.

Hurting Feelings/Causing Offence

People of different temperaments live in the world. Some people always think and understand purely, and act accordingly. Society is proud of the temperament of good people.

But some people are owners of dirty thinking, and their actions are always aimed at their own benefit. In return, they don't care if they ruin others (literally: set fire to others' ovens). People with such intellect do not remain hidden; they are first exposed (literally: become naked) among their own people, and then the law exposes them and presents them before everyone.

The birth of a human is supreme, and God has given them knowledge. Therefore, by keeping their thoughts pure, a human should always perform actions so that no one's feelings are hurt by their ideas.

Nature also has its principles. Whoever hurts someone, one day God also delivers a judgment before them, and the consequence for causing hurt is received.

Many people commit atrocities and cause hurt to the sad, the poor, the weak, laborers, animals, livestock, birds, and other beings. But when the account of whatever action is performed anywhere is taken, one has to hang one's head and suffer the punishment.

If you have hurt someone, try to soothe their wound; this will be a great act of charity. Parents should give such education to their children from the beginning that they do not hurt anyone in their life.

Progressive Thinking

In essence, God created the universe for progressive thinking, but as humans came here and became selfish, they have turned the earth into a kind of hell.

Thinking sets the order of a person's life; good and bad thoughts have an effect according to one's actions. Always cultivate pure, truthful, and religious thoughts in your life, and good results will emerge. If you call this 'Progressive Thinking,' it will be an auspicious name.

Millions of warriors like Shaheed Bhagat Singh, Shaheed Rajguru, and Shaheed Sukhdev made their sacrifices. Their thinking was progressive, and they sacrificed their lives to bring a sigh of relief to others.

Sometimes, the circumstances of the time are such that people criticize progressive thinking or call the thinkers mad. But when their thought bears fruit after enduring the hardships, the same people address them with respectful names like Great Soul (Mahapurush), Saint, Warrior (Yodha), or Valiant (Bali).

Some mischievous people, to overthrow the government of their country, tell people, "Follow us, our thinking is progressive." But often, those people are working for their own benefit and exploit others by making them fools. It is very necessary to beware of such people and to recognize them.

When guests come, maintain ordinary thoughts towards them. Do not think that to show them 'progressive thinking,' you should offer them alcohol, drugs, or indulge in other activities that you might regret later.

Try to adopt the thinking of the wise and religious people in your life, because their thoughts are always benevolent, auspicious, and progressive. Those people who disrespect such thoughts have to regret it later. But the water that has passed once does not return; this is the rule of life.

Appeal/Request

The meaning of 'Appeal' is the English word 'request,' which holds great importance in life; without it, life cannot proceed. Every living entity in the world is connected with a request. Even among other creatures, whose language humans do not understand, there is a distinct way of making an appeal. Life moves forward with an appeal, and stalled tasks start progressing.

I have observed something even in animals: sometimes disputes arise among them, and then they appeal to make up with each other with love. Do not consider this false. Sometimes, even if you are watching, you do not have enough knowledge to understand their action or language.

When your own efforts fail and you face defeat, if you have a set time to fight further, make an appeal, reflect on changes in strategy, and consider your mistakes. If you are truthful, do not lose hope of winning.

If sorrows increase and there seems to be no solution, try to appeal and raise your plea for help to every corner of the world. Baba Kabir Ji preaches, "Keep making appeals; your voice will surely reach the court of God one day." This is the core of the appeal.

Make 'appeal' predominant in your language. Dictatorship, arrogance, and making grand statements do not yield good results. An appeal made with humility can bring you success. Every morning, make an appeal to God for an auspicious day and for the welfare of all, according to the dictum: "Nanak's name is in high spirits, and by Your Will, may there be well-being for all."

Many people, governments, and institutions do not value an appeal. Such people are selfish. Fight them with legal actions, and if the public wishes, they can even bring down governments. Governments also ought to listen to the people and pay attention to their duties regarding their appeals.

Shri Guru Gobind Singh Ji said that when all paths of appeal are closed, it is justified to take hold of the hilt of the sword.

Appeal is another name for humility. If you blend your life with it, there will be less loss and more gains. Children appeal to their parents for something, but the parents keep putting them off. Parents need to consider the legitimate appeals of their children. It should not happen that one day the children revolt against you and move away.

Bribery or Recommendation

Bribery and recommendation (favoritism) have spread like leprosy in many countries, and they play a major role in sinking any nation. The countries where these practices are not tolerated are always in high spirits (prosperous). European countries are close to 100% better in this regard, as bribery and recommendation are minimally prevalent there.

In Arab countries, too, this is seen in a different form, and it is much better than in many countries, as the flag is raised for truth instead of bribery and recommendation.

Laws have been made against the giving and taking of bribes in every country, and by implementing them strictly, a country can be made clean (pure/ethical) in every aspect. If the laws are strict and vigil is maintained, the people there consider looking towards bribery and recommendation an insult to the nation.

One should refrain from taking bribes, because social media has become so fast that it can catch you from any side, and you might face dismissal from your job, imprisonment, and the ruin of your reputation. Sometimes, due to compulsions, giving a bribe becomes beneficial, because this is what happens in a country where there is no cleanliness (integrity). If we clean up the country, that is the best thing, and the benefit is ours.

Casteism

The biggest curse of casteism exists only in India. This is a plague that has destroyed India for centuries. People who believe in caste have made themselves high caste and have treated and are treating people of the so-called low castes worse than animals.

I am also writing a separate book on this, and in Professor Gurnam Singh Muktsar's book, How Indian People Became Lowly (Bharati Lok Neech Kivein Bane), he has written about this very clearly.

God has created all human beings the same, but the difference between rich and poor certainly exists here. There is no difference in their limbs or other functions, so where did caste come from? Yes, I agree with this: if you are fond of creating caste, then determine it by looking at one's work. If a person born into a high caste performs low-caste tasks, they still remain high. If a person from a low caste performs excellent work, they still remain low caste. Where is the justice in this?

Government employees, generally being educated and economically sound, are mostly from the higher castes. The poison spread within them prevents them from ever giving equal rights to sit alongside those who are called low castes.

The great messiah of the lower castes and architect of the Indian Constitution, Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar, was also from the lower castes. His education and knowledge gave him the right to draft the Constitution, but the rights written in the Constitution have not yet been implemented in India according to the Constitution.

I hope that reforms have happened in the past, and in the coming time, when the differences of caste are erased and everyone is treated and understood as a single human being, India can become number one among all the countries of the world.

There is a law against those who speak offensive language against anyone's caste. If the government strictly enforces legal action against such people, those who speak inappropriately will reform themselves.

Conspiracy

Conspiracy is a dangerous activity. Where there is no thought to understand the conspiracy, or where the conspiracy succeeds, nothing is left but destruction. Conspiracy works like poison in the village, family, among friends, in the country, and in the world, leading to destruction in relationships.

What is destroyed by it cannot be fully recovered. Every effort should be made to understand such an action and to resolve it. At such times, losing our minds, getting angry, and becoming frantic causes harm instead of benefit.

Keep your family, your organization, and your country strong, and do not allow the strategy of conspiratorial people to succeed; only then can the country always remain progressive and clean (pure/ethical).

Humans should never forget their duties to humanity. This is why one should always build one's character to stay away from the habit and action of activities like conspiracy. If you cause sorrow to someone today, sooner or later you will suffer sorrow yourself.

Some people, compelled by a habit of gainless pleasure, enjoy setting fire to and destroying others' homes. Such people should please change their habit. One who destroys someone else's house can also burn their own house.

Schemes should be created for the welfare of social enemies, enemies of humanity, sinners, criminals, and people or institutions with such temperaments, and to bring them onto the right path.

We must wholeheartedly do good and work for welfare. The conspirator ultimately becomes exposed, and even when they walk out in the world, people never consider them good, pointing fingers at them or having bad feelings inside.

This is dangerous for the cleanliness (integrity) of our country as well, but we should try to stay away from conspiracies, purify our minds with truth, and make our country truthful and clean.

Trust

To live in the world, living beings need trust in one another. Along with humans, many creatures are also bound by relationships of trust. Even though humans are the supreme creation, other creatures seem to possess more trust than humans. Man is becoming an enemy of man.

In ancient times, the world had greater relationships based on trust; people did not commit deceit. But today, this is not possible. The deceiver first creates a relationship of trust, which then makes it easier for them to commit deceit.

Trust is a priceless gift; the world cannot function without trust. We should try to establish maximum trust in the world. If this happens, the earth will be clean (pure) and heaven all around.

It is easy to trust a person who keeps their word for a second time, and no one trusts a betrayer a second time. This clearly shows us what is harm and what is welfare for the world.

Among the people a person trusts, at least 95% of them break the value of that trust one day or another. However, if you keep 100 dogs, and you ask those who keep dogs, they will tell you that their dogs have maintained their trust even after being beaten, and they do not leave their owner's door even when hungry.

If we cannot do anything else, if we are not truly human, we should at least learn the language and definition of trust from animals. Then, the world can easily become clean (pure).

Agility

The quality of agility should be present in every living being. For some people, this quality is given by God, but for others, agility can be developed by following rules. Today, in the world, speed is the key to success. Agility must be in every person. Animals, birds, and other creatures also need agility. If there is no agility, a person falls far behind; the agile ones move ahead. It is almost impossible to catch up from behind.

In our country, men had left women behind in terms of agility in many areas, but women, recognizing their inner strength, have now surpassed men in several fields. The discussion here is not about man versus woman. The discussion here is about your wisdom and agility. Therefore, you need to understand how essential agility is.

In the matter of agility, you must have heard the story of the tortoise and the hare race, and ultimately, those who do not use their intelligence lose, even if they have agility, and the tortoise wins.

To maintain agility, its concern and goal must be in the mind. Necessary exercise, diet, and rules are needed. Hard work and firm belief can create agility. Excessive eating and drinking, not exercising, laziness, oversleeping, not working, and sitting too much lead to the loss or decrease of agility, and one may fall victim to difficulties and diseases in life.

Athletes, in particular, need to pay more attention to agility, or their game can suffer. Attention should be paid to the agility of children from childhood, and they can become more agile later in life.

In some countries, hooligan boys (mischief-makers) harass girls by showing off their agility with bad intentions, and where this is illegal, it is necessary to take action against these hooligans to stop the spread of dirt (indecency) in society. In some places, some girls have the courage and, by becoming like the Rani of Jhansi, they protect themselves from the hooligans and teach them a lesson; this is a good thing.

The beloved army of the Guru, the Nihang Singhs, are quite aware of this, and when they display the skills of Gatka, their agility is a sight to behold. As they fly through the air, they perform the martial techniques taught by the Guru, enlightening the congregations.

Where there is agility, there will surely be cleanliness (purity). And we need to pay attention to these traditions in our country.

Eating in Excess

When God blesses every living being with life, food is created to sustain life, which, when consumed, allows not just humans but all of nature to progress, grow, and develop.

Humans have a tendency to sometimes consume the food they are blessed with in excess, either because it is very tasty, or because some people, compelled by habit, eat destructively if they get food for free. Subsequently, many have to pay the price for this.

One person ate so much food at a bhog (religious feast) that he started having pain at night. When I went and asked him what was wrong, he told me about the pain in his stomach. I asked someone to give him a pill or take him to a doctor. It was then revealed that the pain was due to him having consumed too much langar (community meal).

Similarly, another person ate a one to one-and-a-half-kilogram box of Patisa (a kind of sweet) all by himself, and in the evening, he complained of stomach pain. I suggested getting him some medicine, and it was then discovered that he had eaten the entire box of Patisa.

So, the request is that only as much food should be eaten as is necessary to run the body. Eating too much food can lead to many kinds of difficulties; you may even have to go to the hospital. Food should be eaten at the right time and should be of the right kind.

In my life, I have seen the food of 45-50 countries, and I have seen the food of many other countries on television. Some foods in China are very strange. They commonly eat snakes, rats, frogs, cockroaches, dogs, cats, and leave nothing out. Watching this can evoke disgust, but they continue to eat it.

India is one of the better countries in this regard because mostly vegetarian people prefer to eat food there, and the feeling of killing towards any being diminishes, which is often seen with non-vegetarian food. So, it is better to eat only vegetarian food, but the rest depends on your wish as to what you want to eat.

If you have cooked extra food at home and it is leftover, instead of throwing it away or spoiling it, distribute it among the needy, poor, or sick people. That will be a very good deed for you.

I know a person who is thin and a little over five feet tall. In the morning, he eats 25 parathas, in the evening 25-30 chapatis, followed by half a kilo of sweets, and then if you give him milk, and then a couple more things to eat, he will not say no. And to this day, I have never seen him say, "That's enough, my stomach is full." When I asked a sensible journalist about this, he said it is a disease that can be treated.

I have seen some people from India and Pakistan on television who eat mountains of chapatis. They usually look for free community meals (langar, etc.) and go there to fill their stomachs, because at home, there is usually no one to make them that many chapatis.

Clean food is necessary for a clean India, a clean body, and a healthy world.

History

It is commonly said that communities that forget their history start heading toward decline. What happened to us, what our ancestors did—their struggles, their mistakes, their sacrifices, and what is better for us—all this must be reviewed through history so we can draw a good conclusion and move forward.

History is our teacher, in a way, and we must honor it and benefit from it. History should be viewed not just for the country and the community, but also for one's own family, and one needs to learn from it. Those who have forgotten their history take time to reach a state of high spirits (prosperity), and then catching up becomes quite difficult.

The history of many communities has not been preserved, which often leads to disappointment and loss during research. The writer also sometimes faces difficulty, because if they write a fact or a piece of information without historical record, many people question it.

Therefore, history is very essential. If you want to give someone a gift, find a good book on history and give it to them, so that they can learn something from their history and feel helped in giving direction to their life.

Learn from history that what was bad for us, what was good, and the sacrifices made by those who gave us knowledge—all of that is very valuable for life. Thus, history can make your country sensible and clean (upright).

Obscenity

Obscenity, nudity, sex-obsessed behavior, hooliganism, harassment, and rape are actions and customs that have been going on for centuries, but their names and forms may vary.

Obscenity generally stems from the character and attire of women, and from the character and hooliganism of men. Forgetting social values and doing things like vagrants is obscenity. Any actions that cause society to lower its gaze constitute obscenity. We have to save ourselves from this and attach only good words to our name in the eyes of society.

Obscenity is a step that leads any culture towards decay. People in any culture where obscenity is dominant will prefer to become slaves, as they derive more pleasure from the excitement and sights of such aspects. They quickly make this a part of their life.

In some countries, obscenity has been made into a profession, and there, they have adopted the path of earning a lot of money through it and leading their lives toward richness. Such activities exist in almost every country in the world, but Muslim countries have some special rules regarding such work, while European countries have freedom for obscenity, and they consider it their custom. In other countries, obscenity is definitely seen in some form or another.

In countries where obscenity is considered bad, I believe obscenity should not be displayed, and the culture of that place should not be harmed, because every country has its own rich cultural life.

Going out while wearing very obscene or sexy clothes can sometimes cause you harm, and potentially something even worse. Therefore, it is necessary to understand the limit of obscenity so that it does not contaminate any country in place of cleanliness.

Some elders do not like obscene or somewhat nude clothes, which have become a common custom nowadays, especially when worn by the women of their own household. The feelings of those elders are not wrong; they have seen a lot in life. It is necessary to pay some attention to their opinions, and I believe there will be no harm in doing so.

There is a very deep relationship between obscenity and cleanliness; there is a need to understand this.

Boarding a Bus, Boarding a Train

In every country around the world, there are buses, cars, trains, and many other means of travel. Humans benefit greatly from these and need them frequently. This mode of travel is very busy in India nowadays, but due to the very large population, accidents or difficulties still occur during these journeys.

I have seen many people traveling by sitting on top of trains or buses, which is very dangerous. These are generally people from the poor strata, and their hope is that by climbing on top, they can usually save the fare, and they have to travel regardless. Most of these are migrants who travel from one state to another for work or go on pilgrimages or other tasks, and they want to save their money by traveling this way. It is hoped that in the coming time, the administration will take some decisions regarding this issue and steer this dangerous journey toward improvement.

The bus fare in India is not very high, and no one should make a mockery of the administration by traveling for free. This causes harm to the country, and when your ticket is checked, you may face disrespect and sometimes even legal action, which is a loss for you.

There is generally a lot of pushing and shoving in buses and trains. To board trains, sometimes porters (coolie) take money to get you seats inside because they are experienced in finding seats amidst the rush. The proper way is that if you have a ticket, you should be given a seat number comfortably; then there would be no loss for you, and no violation of rules. Sometimes, pushing leads to fights, quarrels, and matters even escalate to bloodshed. This is a dangerous issue and needs to be reformed.

I remember a time from my college days when we college boys would not board a standing train. When the train was running quite fast, we would then run and jump on, which I realize today is a mistake no one should ever make, and I apologize for it today in my life. This is a very serious mistake that poses a great danger.

Sit comfortably in the train or bus. Showing off or making mistakes will only cause you harm. Do not pull the train's emergency chain as a prank, as it should only be pulled in times of danger.

During travel, if you see an elderly, sick, or handicapped person, arrange a seat for them, or if you are seated and able to travel standing up, offer your seat to them.

When using the restroom on a moving train, do not litter in it. Do not put your head, hands, or feet out of a moving train, bus, or any other vehicle; this can cause you harm.

Trees

Trees are a great, valuable asset of nature, and God has bestowed them as a great blessing. The tree is a very important part of your life because the oxygen produced by it gives us the breath of life, and the carbon dioxide we exhale provides nutrition to the trees. Every part of a tree benefits humanity, such as the roots, dry leaves, branches, wood, fruit, and flowers, etc.

We need to plant more and more trees. In India, there is no law that requires you to seek permission to cut a tree, and many people who plant trees in their fields or homes plant them on their own and cut them down on their own.

A law should be made that requires the registration of trees, even those planted in homes. If one tree is cut, planting another tree should be mandatory for you. Many people, out of greed, have cut down and sold the trees they planted because wood is expensive. But if they plant trees there again, it would be beneficial for them. Due to a lack of awareness, people do this less often.

The health you gain by sitting or sleeping under the shade of trees cannot be gained through any other means in the world, and these trees provide all these things to you for free.

If trees are planted as much as possible in homes, colleges, schools, extra panchayat land, roadsides, temples, gurdwaras, rivers, canals, and wherever else there are suitable places, it can benefit the country by billions of rupees.

There should be honor for those who plant more trees and serve them; such a tradition should be established. We need to plant more and more trees to make our country clean (green/pure). I have good hopes for this.

Save Water

"Pavan Guru Pani Pita Mata Dharat Mahat." That is, the air is the Guru, water is the Father, and the Earth is the Great Mother. This priceless teaching from Gurbani (Sikh scriptures) explains the great importance of these elements to humans. We can challenge all other things, but not Gurbani. Therefore, we need to respect the importance of this teaching and pay attention to it.

The importance of water and the other two elements is just as great. These are the blessings of nature, and they hold a huge relationship for us in giving us life. If even one of these relationships is broken, our life is also broken. Besides these three, two other elements also come into play: Fire (Agni) and Sky/Ether (Aakash).

If we talk about each one individually, we would need to write a big book, which is impossible for us here. So, let us talk about water here: that we should not waste water unnecessarily, but rather value and respect it. In many places, you have seen that people do not value water and leave the taps running open unnecessarily. Now, when the need for it arises, we have to suffer losses to obtain it. Therefore, we must keep water pure and use it while recognizing it as an important part of our life.

Some people leave the water running while bathing. Do not do this. Use and save the least amount of water possible. Do not pollute the water; keep it clean. Water is needed for crops, and when the crops ripen, they provide us with food to advance our life.

When there is too much rain or floods, they become a disaster. But in my book, How to be saved from the destruction of floods (Jadon Haan Di Tabaahi Ton Kivein Bachiya Jaave), which I have already written, there are some methods, or after that, I have some means and schemes, such that even if more water comes, we can turn it into gold.

My effort is that the administration should take some of these welfare-oriented books that I have written and use them for public welfare. I hope that the importance of water and the other five elements is immense, but when we understand and value them, our country and the world will become auspicious.

Imposing Fines

Imposing fines means giving some punishment to someone who breaks a law. That is, the punishment is seen in the form of them having to pay some money or being sentenced to jail.

Many times, many people make mistakes, some intentionally and some out of arrogance, making themselves look foolish. With such actions, they gain no benefit, and ultimately, they have to face fines or many kinds of losses.

It is a very wrong policy to avoid fines and any punishment by giving a bribe after making a mistake. This breaks the laws of the country and moves the country away from integrity. This means we become people who commit such a sin. There is a need to make more serious laws and charge such people with punishment.

Our country has already progressed significantly, and there is a need for computerized registration in the coming time. If a person commits a crime, is fined, or receives some punishment, and they repeat the mistake, stricter laws should be applied, and they should be dealt with more severely.

In foreign countries, any person's record can be pulled up in a second: where they have lived in the country, what their name is, what their profession is, what their mistakes are, what their good deeds are. They put the complete detail in front of them because all information about everyone is in the computer. It is hoped that our country will also reach this level soon.

So, if anyone breaks any kind of rule, they should definitely be given a fine or a strict penalty so that whenever an opportunity arises to break the law again, it stays in their mind that they will face a loss. Everything is included in this. It is hoped that imposing these fines is very necessary. This will reform the country, make it clean, and instill a fear of the law in the people.

Patriotism

Patriotism is a love for which those who fulfill their duties sacrifice themselves. When any country faces trouble, patriots do not hesitate to sacrifice themselves like moths (to a flame).

In the year 2016, when the situation between India and Pakistan deteriorated, social worker and former soldier Anna Hazare, at the age of 80, said that if a war broke out between Pakistan and India, he would go to fight again. This is patriotism.

Let us all join together and make the feeling of love for our respective countries even higher and truer, and never shy away from making sacrifices. This has happened in every country before, is happening now, and will continue to happen.

Songs of patriotism are sung in every country at different times and different functions, which further generates and elevates the feeling of love among the people listening. Patriotism should be a subject in schools and colleges, and this idea should be fixed in the mind, just as for the people of China and Japan, there is nothing above the feeling for their country.

Because of this, although China is large, it has made the most progress in the world at this time. And Japan is a small country, and two of its cities were reduced to ashes during the World War, but still, no country can compete with Japan in terms of progress.

In special places like the GT Road, parks, schools, colleges, institutions, and squares, sayings or words related to patriotism should be written so that people can draw energy from seeing them.

In contrast, those who become traitors to the country should receive severe punishments so that the enemy of the country who has been born within the home is never born again.

Applying the country's law honestly to oneself, working hard, helping the poor and laborers, being concerned about a clean India, and other good deeds—that is patriotism.

The country where there is a habit of hard work, where education is imparted effectively, and where the poor and needy are helped—that is patriotism. And there, everyone will be working with diligence and dedication, acting as a laborer on the path to becoming a clean India.

Blood Donation

Blood donation is a most supreme form of charity. Saving someone's life by giving blood is a great act of kindness and compassion. While people help society in many ways, only very special people can do blood donation.

If you have an enemy and you get a chance to give them blood, there is a 99% chance that by giving blood, you can turn them from an enemy into a friend. There is no greater method of compassion than this.

Anyway, whether someone is black, white, Chinese, or of any other type—even animals, birds, and other creatures—they all have red blood. No one's blood is blue, black, or of any other color.

Humans should establish a valuable relationship with them as well. May God grant that humanity understands this relationship, and a good blood relation is formed between humans and the rest of nature on earth.

Nowadays, I feel very sad when I see on YouTube that for any purpose, all other species besides humans—which include animals, birds, fish, and millions of other creatures—are killed. That is a very painful moment for me to witness. The way humans kill them is not right, but writing more about this is not beneficial, as for some people, this has become a religious custom, and I do not wish to become unpleasant by writing more about it. May God bless all.

I hope that by donating blood, we can give life to many people, and blessed are those who perform such an act of charity, enduring a little discomfort themselves to give life to others.

Blood relations are very deep and valuable. Those who break them and commit mistakes are heavily punished in God's court one day. Therefore, making a mockery of blood relations is the worst thing.

The relationship between parents and children is the closest blood relation. Today, the relatives of many parents are being ridiculed, and this is a great sin. Whoever is at fault for this receives severe punishment in God's court. Understanding the value of blood relations is very necessary for creating a healthy India.

Teacher and Student

To live in the world, everyone has to do some work, and to do work, there is a need to learn a skill. The direct Punjabi terms for the one from whom you learn a skill are: the one who teaches is the Ustaad (Teacher/Master), and the one who learns is the Shagird (Student/Apprentice).

The Ustaad makes you proficient in a trade by teaching you a skill, making you capable of earning a livelihood. They are equivalent to God, and they should always be respected. Some people respect, honor, and help their Ustaads all their lives, but there are also some people who, after learning a skill from their Ustaads, commit betrayal in their homes. Many things are included in 'betrayal'; it is better if I do not write everything.

If a Shagird achieves a good position, they should not think that they have become higher than their Ustaad. Some Shagirds also avoid recognizing their Ustaad or do not feel it necessary to acknowledge them. This is very wrong.

Some people also choose an Ustaad for wrong deeds, such as becoming a rogue, gambling, committing murder, stealing, robbing, and doing other bad things. Such work is wrong in itself, and therefore, neither the Ustaad nor the Shagird in such cases ever prospers in the world. You see that such people always face a bad end. They are sometimes beaten by the police and sometimes become evil in the eyes of society.

Such people should change their path and adopt another way that allows them to remain clean (pure) themselves and also elevate the name of their Ustaad. Only then can this country become clean (upright).

Birth, Name, and Rituals

God created this beautiful world, and to make it even more beautiful, according to religious scriptures, He created 8.4 million species. Sometimes, we look at each other and are very happy about how many lovely forms and faces have been created here. These births are continually being renewed, and some are coming to an end. This entire game is in the hands of God.

The human birth is the most supreme, and God has blessed it with the capacity for understanding and the quality to perform the most beautiful actions. The names of the other species were also created by some people themselves, or, according to God's knowledge and intellect, every object has been given a separate name.

After the name, every living being and soul is given rituals (Sanskaar)—meaning how it should behave in life. Everyone is busy with their own tasks.

After these initial rituals, as a person navigates life, they create their own rituals, some good and some bad. Finally, whatever is born must also end. Some live for a short time, and some for centuries, and then their final rites (antim sanskaar) are performed.

There are different final rites for different creatures. The most beautiful final rites, done with respect and care, are for humans. Many creatures, however, wander neglected, and in very poor conditions, they cannot even complete these respectful rites.

Wherever there are respectful rituals and where people's thinking is guided by good rituals, that country can become an upright nation. You will seldom hear positive words for those with bad rituals.

Laughing and Crying

Today, there will be a great spectacle: some will laugh, and some will cry. This is what is seen in life. When there is happiness, people laugh with joy; when there is sorrow, they cry. These are the two wheels of life. Where there is joy in life, there is sometimes sorrow as well. These things never remain constant.

Happiness cannot be bought with money, and sorrows or grief cannot be stopped with strength or money. A human's duty is to perform virtuous deeds, and the accounts of all these actions are compiled with God. Based on this, God makes a decision both immediately and in His court, and action is taken upon it.

Perform good deeds, and you will receive goodness. It is not easy for those who do bad deeds to escape sorrows. Making someone laugh is a good thing; it brings them happiness. Especially with people who are going through sorrow, behave in a way that makes them laugh so that they can escape their painful moments for a while.

There is no greater sin than making someone cry, and those sinful people will surely receive the punishment for that sin. The happiness we gain by causing sorrow to someone, we think is an achievement of ours, but the court of God says that your account is written with me. You may also have to bear the consequences in your lifetime, and after death, your final account will be settled where only the truth is judged.

Therefore, only perform virtuous deeds in this life. Your good thinking can make your country, your life, your family, and those who associate with you pure (upright/clean).

Right/Claim

Whoever is born on Earth is sent here by God, and He sends them with a rule established for their right (Haq) and duty (Farz). Coming here, humans use these, but sometimes, understanding it as their right, they usurp the rights of others.

Usurping someone's right is a great sin, and its cost must definitely be paid. All those who usurp rights must definitely understand this knowledge.

Sometimes, in the arrogance of their power or self-proclaimed gangster status, many people usurp the rights of their friends, relatives, siblings, close ones, or someone or the other. While they are alive, those sins come before them and make them realize that God can never give happiness to one who commits a mistake like theirs. And today, they have received punishment, and the punishment they are to receive in the next journey (afterlife) will not be forgiven, even after a hundred requests.

It is also written in Gurbani that consuming someone else's right is equivalent to a Hindu eating a cow or a Muslim eating a pig. But here, people of the gangster type and rogue type—the more they consume others' rights—they use whatever method they have to earn money for themselves. But when their sins and punishments are presented before them, no one shares their burden.

Therefore, the good thing is: never usurp anyone's right, and if you do, the price you have to pay will be more than you can afford. These are the rules of God. We should only consume what is rightfully ours and, from our own earnings, take out a tithe (Dasvandh) to help the poor and the suffering. This is humanity, and this humanity will make you pure (upright) and can make your family and your country pure.

Arrogance / Ego

In a person's life, there is less humility and more arrogance, which causes them to trouble everyone through the display of their power, ultimately ruining themselves.

An arrogant person always wants to call the shots (literally: wants to run the leather whip), and time even grants them a reprieve to correct themselves, but the arrogance that has entered them does not allow them to understand.

There is a saying, "The arrogant is vanquished" (Hankaariya so maariya). There is a need to pay attention to this, and it is evident before the world that the arrogance of an arrogant person one day breaks, and they are ruined.

Whatever one says, this short life, blessed for love, is very precious, but humans, crushed under the wheel of lust, anger, greed, attachment, and arrogance, commit the slaughter of humanity by shedding blood. The result of arrogance is never good.

One person was a well-known liquor contractor in Punjab, but arrogance has now reduced him to such a state that he does not even get food. He was famous in Punjab, served a long jail sentence, his sons were also in jail, and his land is gone. At one time, he used to have 25-30 jeeps with him. Every officer in Punjab was his friend. Now, he probably doesn't even have a bicycle. Lying in the courtyard of his house, some person from here or there comes and gives him food.

This is the end of the arrogant man. Wherever the arrogant person strikes and the people they oppress, their curses ultimately destroy those arrogant people, and nature is also not pleased with the arrogant person.

Do not support arrogant people. Do not befriend them. If you walk with them, you will suffer such a loss that you will regret it for the rest of your life. In this, the gains are few, and the losses are many.

Toys

Since the world was established, not only humans but other creatures as well have had the desire to entertain themselves and play. The means by which they fulfill such desires are called toys.

In earlier times, according to the era, natural elements were these toys, but then time created such toys that humans started playing with other humans, treating them as mere playthings. Humans have now become addicted to this.

Look at children today: mobile phones have become such toys that small children, only a few months old, start playing with mobiles, the results of which are not good. Whether you are walking, sitting on a train, sitting at home, or sitting on a plane, everyone has a telephone in their hand, with which they are entertaining themselves by playing something.

I once had to fly from Belgium to Italy. Sitting on the plane, I noticed that almost all the men had phones in their hands. I was the only one who had put his phone in his pocket because my phone was not working on the plane. Otherwise, I, too, would probably have taken out my phone and started doing something on it like them.

I felt a sense of embarrassment, and I took out my phone and started moving my hands and feet (fumbling) like them, pretending that I was not inferior to them in this task.

Do not become slaves to toys. Most of the people in our village who play cards sit together in groups from morning till evening. Some even get messages from home to do work, but they do not go home. Do not be such a slave.

Pardon me, it's not just our village, but similar situations exist in all other villages, as everyone is now economically quite stable, and they do not face much difficulty running the household even without work.

Make rules regarding toys, especially for children. It should not be that they become so obsessed with toys that they neglect other work and only focus on the toys. Do not buy too many toys. If children insist, explain to them lovingly and break the habit.

Buy a toy for children that increases their knowledge and helps their brain development. Some people buy children models of swords, cannons, tanks, guns, pistols, and dangerous, frightening toys, and the children start mimicking those actions. This directs their feelings towards the wrong path, and with feelings directed toward the wrong path, a clean India cannot be built.

Respect

When humans come together, a society is formed, and in society, respect holds a very high place. God has blessed humans with this honor above all. Other living beings lack the great ability to understand respect. Respect is most essential for humans. Without respect, life is tasteless, incomplete, and joyless.

Respect cannot be bought; it can only be earned through actions. Actions are also necessary to maintain it. Saddam Hussein of Iraq commanded respect, but he maintained that respect partly through fear. Look at Gaddafi; he also had respect. In contrast, look at the respect commanded by Nelson Mandela or Yasser Arafat.

But when a mistake is made in preserving respect, or if arrogance appears, the respect earned is mingled with dust. You must keep the concern and preservation of this in your mind.

Keep the invaluable asset of respect in such a bank that no one else can take it out or harm it. Its interest should increase, and more principal should be accumulated.

Respect everyone, especially your parents, elders, the poor, the sick, and the helpless. By respecting them, a very great and important rule is followed, and this rule is priceless and yields excellent fruit.

Start respect first from your home, your relatives, your town, your country, and extend this feeling of respect to the world. For respect, you must have a sweet voice, which starts the process of earning respect. Then, by performing sweet deeds, the roots of respect can be solidified.

I saw a father who would call his 13-14 year old son, "Hey, your mother's husband, come here." The child was young, but he understood, and he nursed a great deal of resentment. Later, due to such language, a rift developed in those relationships.

Respect for women in society is essential; only then can the situation at home be right and progress be made. Always respect the law of your country; only then can the country become clean (upright). Always remember this: if respect is lost once, it is not easy to rebuild it.

Television and Radio

In today's time, television, radio, and other such means have made great progress. Wherever you look, you see such electronic devices all around that you cannot even imagine.

Now, some tools have even been created on the internet, where you can download an app, direct any question you have towards it, or ask about any difficulty, and it will solve it and tell you the answer.

Such devices have arrived. I saw one at my daughter's house, who has a very large house—there is an automatic, round machine for cleaning the house. You press a button and leave it; it automatically cleans the entire floor of the house. Even if an obstacle comes in its way, it has sensors installed that allow it to lightly touch the obstacle and move forward.

Robots for domestic work have also started selling. Planes fly without pilots. I have seen underground trains running without drivers in France.

My point is that science has progressed greatly, and it has probably been 50 years since televisions and radios started operating with remote controls. New things are continually emerging.

We should respect the progress of these inventions and need to understand them so that we can gain more benefits. We can make ourselves and our country clean (advanced) by utilizing their services.

When cleaning electrical devices, do not use a wet cloth; damage may occur, and you could be electrocuted.

Love

"Saach kahon sun leho sabhai, jin prem kio tin hee Prabh paaio." (I speak the truth, let all listen, those who have loved have attained God.)

This command of Satguru Sri Guru Gobind Singh Ji is very precious and is an ocean of such teaching that whosoever has swum in it has attained a liberated life.

Truly, love is a great blessing, but it has to be earned. Love cannot be understood with money or with any influence, but its true form can only be grasped with an inner feeling.

It is through love that one meets God, and with the meeting of God, everything is taken care of. Those who have understood true love have led a pure life both here and hereafter. Whether externally or not, they have achieved very high positions internally.

Whether you love your parents, children, wife, country, or objects, you must understand that the love should be of a kind whose further branches become more beautiful and fragrant, making the country and the world clean (pure).

Love demands sacrifice, and from the lap of sacrifice, love comes like a fresh, beautiful sun and a beautiful moon, becoming your friend.

A loving person has no enemy; they see the Divine in everyone. They even make friends with animals and birds. Baba Farid Ji converted 10 lakh Hindus to Muslims through his preaching of love, while Aurangzeb, with his sword, could not convert even half of that.

Love is close to purity, so its value should be cherished. Love religious scriptures, love principles, love life to make it beautiful. Do not go mad for any love that will destroy you.

There is nothing above the love of parents. Some people, especially after marriage, follow their wives and disrespect their parents. They forget that love. When God delivers the result later on, the time that has passed does not return.

Anger

"Farida bure da bhala kar, gussa man na hindhaaey. Dehee rog na laggai, palle sabh kichh paaey." (O Farid, do good to the bad, and do not let anger dwell in your mind. The body will not be afflicted by disease, and you will gain everything.)

Baba Farid Ji has given a great teaching to the world in this couplet, a teaching for which a person could spend many lifetimes searching, but which Baba Ji has graciously given to us for free here. Therefore, by adopting this auspicious teaching in life, we can receive millions of blessings.

Baba Ji has explained quite simply here that even if someone does wrong to you, you should not wish ill upon them or harbor anger in your mind. Doing so can free your body from diseases, and you can be blessed with priceless mercies.

If a person gets angry, if they can distract themselves for somehow one to five minutes, the anger usually cools down a little. Anger is a kind of fire, and when it comes, it can reduce many things to ashes, leading to regret later.

Do not get angry at the mistakes of children. Forgive them and explain to them what is wrong. This will improve their mistakes. Nowadays, children are becoming opposed to the wishes of their parents. Getting angry with them is not a good thing, nor can it yield good results. Sit down and explain to them with love. If they understand, that is good. If not, then do not take any step out of anger, because those who value relationships do not let the conversation reach that point. Times are difficult.

When angry, if possible, drink cold water. This can create opportunities to curb the anger. Do not make any decisions in anger because your thinking is not stable at that moment, and your decision can cause you harm.

Do not interact with neighbors and very close people while you are angry; it will lead to loss.

Elders

Elders are a great, invaluable treasure. And those who take care of the elders will, in turn, be cared for by their own children when they become elders. This is a rule created by Nature and by God. In religious scriptures, elderly parents hold a very high status.

In earlier times, the elders of the house reigned supreme, and their children would place the elders on a high seat and sit on a lower place themselves, thus elevating their respect. Time has started to change this significantly, and now, rebellion against elders is often commonplace.

This results in painful outcomes, because when we start disrespecting things that should be preserved and cared for, the Eternal Being (Akaal Purakh) is not pleased.

The request is that whether the elders are your own, your neighbors', or anyone else's, do not disrespect them. If possible, to make your own or others' elders happy, sit with them and talk lovingly, or fulfill any of their needs according to your capacity, or alleviate some of their suffering. This will yield a very good result.

When elders stop earning money, their value decreases, and they cannot fulfill their wishes, such as wanting to eat something sweet or their favorite food. Generally, this desire is not fulfilled in poor countries where elders do not have their own income. If their children pay attention to this, they will receive very good results.

If elders feel some difficulty in walking around, make arrangements for their mobility. Get them crutches, or if possible, get them a bicycle on which they can sit and go somewhere nearby. Such bicycles are commonly available in the market.

Sit with the elders, refresh old memories, and appreciate the work they have done, and thank them very much. This will give them great joy and fill them with enthusiasm. Wherever elders are cared for, God, being pleased, gives the opportunity to become clean (upright/prosperous).

Children

"Bachche man ke sachche, saare jag ki aankh ke taare." (Children are truthful of heart, they are the stars in the eyes of the whole world.) Someone wrote this song very beautifully, and in many places, children are also described as the form of God.

In any case, children are a gift from God, and they are very precious gifts. As long as a child remains a child, there is great purity in their mind. Even if someone does something bad to them, they quickly forget it and regain their good feelings towards that person.

If children are cared for from the very beginning in a cultural manner, it can create a very good future for them. Pay enough attention to children so that they do not form a relationship with any bad habit, especially intoxication and vices.

If a child is very mischievous, do not beat them. Explain to them with love and try to teach them what discipline is. Do not hit or abuse the child; explain the definition of love to them, and it will have a good effect.

Do not commit wrong actions in front of children. Do not fight in the family, do not drink alcohol, do not use abusive language, wear appropriate clothes, and remain cultured, which will yield good results.

Teach children to be disciplined, and on holidays, tell them to rest. Also, teach them how to behave if they go to someone else's house. Give children knowledge about stealing and honesty.

Teach them to recognize appropriate clothing. I saw a girl at the Delhi airport who was about 14-15 years old, and she was the daughter of a Sardar. She was wearing such short shorts that half of her buttocks were visible. Initially, I felt like talking to her parents, but then I thought that since we were standing at the airport, it was better to keep quiet than get involved in some trouble.

Then, I saw a picture on Facebook of a Sardar and his newly married bride. That girl was also exposed like the first girl, and her Sardar husband was standing there laughing heartily. Such attire is generally not considered right for Sikhs (Sardars), but I don't know how the minds of such people change that they do not see any value in religion and culture.

Anyway, parents should try to advance their children's lives according to the rules; then life will become good, and a clean India will also be built. Children are the future of the country, and we must make the future clean (pure/upright).

Religious Places

India is a religious country, and every particle of its soil has been purified by sages and saints. India probably has more religious places in total than all other countries in the world. Although some calamities and tragedies have occurred here, India is still counted among the world's good countries on the path to prosperity today.

Local and foreign people come here to gain religious knowledge, and they are so happy with their lives, it is as if they have attained liberation. Many saints, sages, and ascetics from India have gone to other countries of the world and established religious places. And especially the Punjabi people from India, wherever they go, according to their nature, they prioritize building religious places as soon as they get the chance.

In the world, it is Punjab, India, that goes wherever calamity strikes to share the suffering, and the tradition of setting up free community kitchens (Langar) in the world is only found in the Sikh religion. The annual donations made by Sikhs and the Langar served for religious purposes total more than billions and trillions, and no country in the world has been able to do this to date. Those who see it wonder how they can manage so much. Generally, people consider it a burden to feed even one person, but the whole world knows how Baba Nanak's Langar system operates.

Religious places are sacred, and maintaining their sanctity is the main task of devotees and management. It is very important to ensure their security, cleanliness, and adherence to rules.

When going to a religious place, go after cleansing your body and mind through a bath. Do not harbor any evil thoughts in your mind when you go there. Take the religious knowledge you gained from there, adopt it in your life, and make your life religious. Some people even steal after going to religious places. Such people can never prosper here or anywhere else.

Go to a religious place, donate appropriately, and share the knowledge of religion with the world. There is a need for careful consideration before building new religious places. Sometimes, thoughtless people compete with each other and just keep building religious places. This has less benefit and is the result of wrong thinking among themselves.

Do not go to religious places after consuming any intoxicant, and strictly adhere to the rules and constitution established there. Fighting over religion is wrong, and misusing it is also wrong.

Encourage children to go to religious places so that their minds are purified, and only a pure mind can build a clean India.

Nitnem

The word Nitnem is quite old, but within the Sikh community, it is known with a very high status. It means taking the name of God, meditating, and performing the prescribed recitation according to a fixed method every day.

Generally, the tradition for every Sikh is to recite as many hymns as possible, but the essential Nitnem includes the five Banis (hymns) in the morning, Rehras Sahib in the evening, and Sohila Sahib before sleeping.

Non-Sikhs who have faith in the Bani (scripture) can also perform Nitnem, but it is essential to follow the rules while reciting it. If you do not have complete information about Nitnem, seek guidance from someone knowledgeable or go to a Gurdwara Sahib to get information, and perform the Nitnem with reverence.

Apart from religious daily prayer, Nitnem is also used to refer to work that must be done every day, but it is predominantly used to refer to the daily religious recitation/worship. Some people also refer to the necessary work they do every day as Nitnem.

Make a habit (Nitnem) of good deeds only, and do not let bad deeds enter it. Advise your children, friends, and people who listen to you to adopt good habits (Nitnem).

Encourage the recitation of hymns according to Nitnem; this will purify their lives, and only a pure life can build a clean India and a clean world.

Books

The importance of books is immense. In the governance of any country, all work is recorded through paper, books, and copies. I may have written earlier in a book that even a computer is a type of book, but its form has changed.

Books are an ocean of knowledge, and they are so beneficial that if you have a book, you can sit anywhere and read it. Respect books and do not disrespect them by carelessly throwing them around.

If you give a good book as a gift, there can be no better gift than that. Those people whom God has blessed with the knowledge to write books and show you a good path—fully respect such people. It will be a very virtuous act for both you and them.

If you borrow a book from someone else to read, consider it your duty to return the books on time. If possible, always clean your hands before touching any book; this shows respect for the book. Do not read a book while lying down; it affects your eyes.

Institutions and religious bodies should take the responsibility of preserving and publishing good books or religious scriptures. If someone has written a good book, the institution should bear the cost, get it published, distribute it for promotion, and also honor the author.

If God has blessed you with knowledge, definitely write such a book that serves the welfare of all, and makes your country and the world so pure (upright) that people honor your name.

Lie/Falsehood

Lying is counted among the worst things in the world. Generally, more and more matters are ruined by telling a lie, and eventually, the outcome is negative for you personally.

People who lie cannot remain hidden for long, and their image in society becomes that of a liar, which causes them great harm. God is not pleased with those who lie, and the life of one with whom God is not pleased can never be good.

A lie has no legs (it cannot run far), and it cannot last for a long time, so you should stay away from lies.

One person I know became so addicted to lying that he tells a lie even when there is no benefit in it. Now, even when he tells the truth, people think it is a lie, but he never changed until the very end.

Earnings made from lies and sin will always cause you harm one day, so you should stay away from it.

There is a definite need to impart some knowledge about truth and falsehood in schools and colleges so that students can learn from there and speak about it within their own circles.

Anyone who lies can also get caught in difficulties and then face punishments or fines. Those who rely on lies should change themselves, walk with the truth, and build a clean (upright) country.

Illness

All things and beings that are created will, in some form, certainly face illness at some point in their lives. Illness is a dangerous game, but very often, we encounter situations where we bring illness upon ourselves, or we can relieve ourselves of the illness.

Illness can affect anyone, even if they are a heavy and strong iron anvil. If you leave an anvil outside for some time, keep sprinkling water on it, or do not clean it, it will be afflicted by an illness called rust. Life is similar; it needs to be kept clean, and then the chances of avoiding illnesses are greater.

If you feel you have an illness and you think that this illness is not getting better, you must seek a doctor's help so that they can give you medicine and treat the illness. Do not feel ashamed or hesitate to go to the doctor for an illness.

Some people sometimes do not take the medicine given for an illness, but this only harms you. The medicine given by the doctor must be used.

Eating someone's leftovers, wearing someone's clothes, using someone's toothbrush, or using someone's bedding, etc.—these are several things from which you may face illnesses, so be cautious of this.

If you feel that the elders are suffering from an illness, fulfill your duties towards them, get them checked by a doctor, and give them medicine. Adhering to the rules made concerning illness can make you and the country clean (healthy).

Nurturing / Upbringing

Although the creation of humans is a gift of nature, the responsibility for their nurturing and upbringing (Paalan Poshan) has also been bestowed upon humans or the family by nature itself.

Development occurs through nurturing. Proper nurturing can advance not only a human but also nature (the environment). For example, a stray dog has a life full of hardships, but if you catch that same stray dog, nurture it, and give it training according to the rules, that stray dog becomes a very valuable dog.

The same rules apply to other parts of nature, and these rules are very precious. There is a need to create special rules regarding nurturing, and a syllabus for this should be created in schools, colleges, and universities, which everyone can read to gain and share knowledge.

Good nurturing is not available to everyone, and there is a need to know its value. The nurturing of poor people is full of hardships. Therefore, if it is possible for you, providing any appropriate help in someone's nurturing is a great act of virtue.

Eating, drinking, residing, getting up, sitting, and spending one's life—all these also fall under nurturing. And those who have the duty should fully fulfill it and nurture others.

Sometimes, a child's nurturing has been correct, but they fall into bad company and ruin their future. Attention should be paid to these things, and children need to be kept under observation.

A mother needs good nutrition so that she can provide good nurturing to her children by breastfeeding them.

Wearing / Attire

The human birth, which is very precious, places great importance on wearing (attire)! This means covering one's body with clothes. I hope that everyone has enough knowledge about how to wear clothes, but some people today, caught up in fashion, turn wearing into a joke or an act of semi-nudity.

They consider this to be a very good thing because they think that by wearing this way, they are better than others, due to fashion. Sometimes this proves to be good, but sometimes the resulting harms are such that one may have to face physical and mental difficulties.

Many times, incidents like rape are also related to attire. Many people who go to parties cause harm to themselves by exposing their bodies instead of wearing more clothes, and the annual count of deaths related to this is quite high.

Wearing white clothes in summer and black clothes in winter benefits your body. Wear clothes that match each other. Sometimes, some people wear clothes that become a subject of laughter and ridicule because they do not match.

Do not rush while dressing. Maintain a moderate pace, and do not take too long to get dressed. Do not wear someone else's clothes; we have written about this sufficiently in the book.

At home, wear appropriate and comfortable clothes so that your body can feel somewhat relaxed. If you are not good at dressing, ask someone you know who has knowledge about this so that you appear somewhat better, which will also make your country appear upright (cultured).

Taking Off

Many people put on clothes and garments, but when taking them off, they do not have complete knowledge, and they end up damaging the clothes or causing harm to themselves.

I bought a nice coat-pant set for a relative's son at his request, but my heart was saddened when I saw where he threw it. He probably would never have been able to buy that coat-pant set in his life, but since I had bought it for him, he hadn't spent any of his own money.

It was sometimes thrown in the courtyard, sometimes hanging somewhere, sometimes lying on a cot, sometimes tossed in with a quilt, and sometimes kept on a box. He had no regard for where to keep it after taking it off, but when he wore it, he looked like a sharply-dressed man with a great personality.

Perhaps because I had bought it for him and he hadn't paid, he was being careless, or maybe he simply lacked knowledge about it.

After taking off clothes, they should be kept in a suitable place until they are worn again, or they should be washed at the appropriate time and put away in the proper place.

Some people use knives, scissors, screwdrivers, blades, needles, etc., when taking off clothes; this can cause damage. Some people take someone else's help to take off clothes, but you should wear clothes that you can remove yourself.

If you don't have the knowledge of how to take off clothes properly, you must gain that knowledge, as only the correct method can make the country clean (disciplined).

Hard Work

"Hard work is the key to success." We have been reading this phrase in books since childhood, and as we grew up, we realized the importance of this statement—that it is absolutely true.

There is a need for hard work to build a life and stand on one's own feet, and you should never shy away from it. Along with hard work, there is a need to use the mind as well; everything cannot be achieved with just labor alone.

Pay attention to hard work by learning from your teachers, and success can be achieved. Do not gamble away money earned through hard work, and never get addicted to gambling. Do not waste money earned through hard work unnecessarily, because where money can work, perhaps nothing else can.

Do not be arrogant about the success achieved through hard work, and if possible, teach others the lesson of hard work as well. Kindly request and inspire those who are lazy to understand that life cannot be improved without hard work.

Have faith in hard work. It is possible that the seed planted today may yield fruit after a month, a month and a half, or six months, but it will surely yield fruit.

Some people who commit thefts and robberies also say that it is their hard-earned money, but this is their misconception. Earnings acquired through any wrong means can definitely prove harmful to you one day; these are the rules made by God.

The hard work of the people of China and Japan has brought them to the top countries of the world. If every country and every human being does this, they can progress and one day make their country so clean (upright) that it is the world's first and best clean country.

Rich and Poor

In the world, a person who has more money is called rich, and one with less money is called poor. Although religious scriptures say something else, worldly richness and poverty are very clear, and wealth is necessary for living life in front of everyone.

It is generally observed that when a person becomes very rich, they become ethically lower than even a poor person. A person earning wealth does not feel pain in doing wrong or twisted deeds, but a poor person remains grateful to God even while eating dry bread.

I heard about a man whose brother was retired from a high position in America and whose sons held high posts. He received a substantial pension, and the land of his house was worth billions. Two sacks full of currency notes were found under the cot at his house, and he did not even know where, when, or how they were placed there. However, the sick family member who helped build the house, instead of spending money on his illness, the sons thought it better to dismiss him.

It is essential to be rich at heart rather than just in wealth and possessions. If you have 100% income, try to take 10% out of it and use it for good deeds. This surely brings blessings.

Do not trouble the poor, the helpless, or the distressed with your wealth. I saw the son of rich parents in Phillaur senselessly kicking a poor servant who worked there to bring water at a beautiful car garage. This is a very despicable act, and the results of this eventually appear.

Poor people are generally very pure of heart and always fear God. Arrogance is not found in them. The poor person is usually afraid of deceit and fraud and stays away from gambling, robbery, and theft. The example of the rich people who commit robbery and theft is entirely different.

When a person becomes rich, they start spending money extravagantly, and the results of that eventually turn out to be very bad. You should help the poor according to your income, even if it's just a small amount. This will be a very virtuous act.

The poor should not give up hard work and should keep praying. God is not asleep; there may be a delay in His house, but there is no injustice. When people understand richness and poverty, and truthfulness comes into their minds, and they become honest in their work, consider that a clean India has been built.

Work, Occupation, and Agriculture

It is necessary for the life of human beings, and not just them, but all the creatures of nature, to do work. However, the forms of this work may vary. Some of these forms we understand, and some we do not.

Life cannot run without work, and the earnings made from work explain the true meaning of life to you. Whether someone works in an office, is a laborer (porter), works in the police, or teaches in a school, work is work.

Here in foreign countries, in many factories, there are some owners who, when needed, work alongside the laborers themselves. When I first settled and started working permanently in Holland, the owner of that factory, where about 25 of us worked, whenever he came into the factory, he would sometimes pick up a broom and start cleaning, sometimes he would start cleaning the toilets, and sometimes he would start doing whatever other necessary work he saw.

Such a mindset should exist in any job; we are all equal. In some countries, if a person's work gets a little better, they hire servants and consider themselves superior by ordering them around, but this is not the case in foreign countries. Someone from India asked me, "You must have many servants at your house," but when I told them that we have no servants, and it is not the custom to keep servants at anyone else's house there, we ourselves remain engaged in work, from cleaning our house to washing dishes and doing all the work ourselves, they did not believe me. These are some misconceptions about foreign countries.

Therefore, a laborer should always keep working according to the rules, with faith in their hard work and their work, so that they can make the country healthy/upright.

Agriculture is the main occupation of Punjab, but farming is done extensively throughout the country. The farmer has to work very hard, and when their hard work brings results to their home, their fatigue vanishes. The farmer should sow good seeds for crops, but all farming tasks should be completed according to the rules; only then can the yield be good.

Regarding the farmers, the government needs to be serious and consider those rules and the farmers' demands. Even when farmers go on strikes, these actions should be done with very good planning and unity; only then is there success. But you know what happened in the farmers' struggles here, and now there is no unity among the farmers, so the success of the farmers' struggles is impossible.

The farmer should receive a good price for the crop, and companies should not hold onto their money, as this harms the farmer, and it should not happen. The farmer should continue to receive good seeds, good fertilizers, and other facilities; only then can agriculture bring good results.

If the farmer has to take out a loan for expenses, it should only be spent on farming. Many times, farmers, fearing their children, cannot speak up, and they spend borrowed money on their children in ways that lead not to progress but to loss. This often causes farmers to commit suicide. Regarding this, you must read my book, "How to Stop Farmer Suicides."

Farmers are the future of our country, and steps need to be taken to keep this future always bright; only then is India pure/upright.

Animals

India is a large country, and a significant portion of it is inhabited by vegetation, forests, rivers, streams, canals, and so on. Many different types of animals live in these forests, and they are essential for the development of the earth and vegetation.

While these animals offer benefits to us, they also pose some harm. When animals damage crops and other property, or when they attack and kill humans, the animal is called bad at that moment. But when benefits are derived from animals—for instance, we see that we have to keep animals for milk.

There are horses, mares, and elephants; there are various kinds of animals in circuses. We see and hear about many other animals, and we share a kind of friendly relationship with them. Animals are very beautiful and are a gift of nature. If we treat them with respect, they are good friends to us, but we need to be careful of their wild instincts.

The presence of animals is also necessary for increasing the beauty and purity (health/ecological balance) of any country.

Speaking

Speaking is a priceless gift given to nature by God, through which we can express our feelings to others by speaking in the different languages relevant to us. Sorrow, troubles, and joys are shared through speaking.

A person should always speak with love, and a sweet voice can always yield good results. Such a manner is also beneficial for health.

When speaking, be mindful that your breath does not have a bad odor. Ensure that your spit does not fall on others and that the expression on your face is not one that would seem offensive to the listener.

Some people talk while eating; doing this can lead to various kinds of physical harm. Speak only minimally while eating.

When speaking, use words appropriately. Be mindful of using abusive language, speaking badly, speaking in anger, or letting love disappear from your voice.

Some people talk even when sitting alone; this is a mental problem or illness that can be solved by consulting a doctor or through counseling.

Do not speak against anyone's honor.

When speaking, using respectful words, religious phrases, and reciting some respectable mantras from Gurbani or other religious scriptures can increase your respect and can also be a source of great knowledge.

Some people stammer (lisp); this can be treated by a doctor. Do not take a bet (challenge) by speaking.

By speaking auspicious and pure words, our India or the world can become clean (upright).

Massage

The body is generally always in motion, and through these activities, sometimes due to heavy work or work beyond one's age, the body is affected. Among these effects, fatigue is commonly observed.

The body should always keep moving, as sitting idle increases laziness. To combat fatigue, you should have good nutrition, and if a massage is done along with that, it is the icing on the cake (literally: gold on the treated surface).

Try massaging your body parts, and you will feel great relief, and your body will feel light, alert, and agile.

You can massage with any good oil that is not harmful to the body. After the massage, it is best to wait for some time and then bathe with slightly warm water so that the applied oil does not spoil your clothes or garments.

Nowadays, those who perform massages have opened shops in various places. You can go there, or you can perform a significant amount of massage on yourself, or you can get it done by a family member.

In the massage shops opened in the market, bad practices often take place; one should stay away from those. There are quite a few such places in foreign countries, and they provide great comfort and relief to the body.

When the body feels pure and excellent, you will not feel tired while working. In such circumstances, building a clean (healthy/active) country is easy.

Jewellery

Jewellery, ornaments, and adornment have been a practice for centuries. We see evidence and photos of some gods and goddesses in ancient times that show they enjoyed wearing jewellery and were fond of it, which is not a bad thing.

Buy only as much jewellery as you have appropriate money for. Sometimes, people buy and keep jewellery, and if the need arises according to the time, they can sell it and use it for some work. Sometimes, jewellery is kept at home, and a family member commits theft, which then increases conflicts in the house. Therefore, always keep jewellery secure.

Do not give or take jewellery on loan. It is possible that your jewellery may not be returned, or something may happen to it that could start a conflict.

Not everyone has knowledge about the value of gold and silver in jewellery. Therefore, when buying jewellery, take an artisan with you and get the appropriate documents stating the value of your jewellery and its purity/quantity. After that, you should also get the jewellery checked by someone else to ensure there is no deceit involved.

Nowadays, the time is not good for wearing jewellery outside, as snatchers grab the jewellery and run away. This results in the loss of your jewellery, and you may also be harmed.

When you wear jewellery to a party, be mindful that your jewellery has been worn and that no one has stolen it. If necessary, you can get a safe deposit box in banks to store jewellery securely.

Jewellery can also be insured. You should get insurance so that if an accident ever occurs, you can be protected from loss.

Just as we adorn ourselves with jewellery, we also need to purify (or adorn) our country.

Guest

Different countries of the world have their own ways of hospitality, but in India, and especially in Punjab, hospitality is considered highly superior. The same excellent hospitality exists in Pakistan's Punjab as well. In many places, due to culture, the guest is called a form of God, and serving them is considered essential.

In earlier times, when a guest usually arrived in the villages, many houses in the village would invite them to their homes and serve them. But this era has changed quite a bit. Now, no matter how close a guest is, they will first inform you via phone, complete the work they came for during the day, and then leave.

Nowadays, there are very few guests who stay for two, four days, or a month. In the earlier times, we, too, would go to our maternal grandparents, uncles, or aunts and sometimes spend our school holidays there. But the winds of time seem to have put an end to all these customs.

No one is too happy when someone sets up camp at their house. People show a little superficial courtesy, but if they don't have a vested interest in you, the common feeling is usually, "When will this person leave so we can be rid of them?"

People welcome any guest who arrives from a foreign country with sweet words, but they also have a motive—to get some money from them or gain some other benefit. The person who does not fulfill their motive is often cut off from conversation by them in the future.

If you go to someone's house as a guest, be sure to keep your valuable items safe. It is possible that some individual there may come and make your belongings disappear.

If you go to someone's house as a guest, praise the arrangements they made for your tea and refreshments when you are leaving, and thank them.

Do not go to anyone's house as an unwelcome guest forcefully, and understand the feelings of that household. If they want to move you out, do not forcefully maintain your presence there, as this will diminish your respect. It is not good to visit someone's house as a guest every day.

Just as the guest is honored, it is our duty to make our country a 'guest' in our heart so that it remains eternally clean (pure/upright).

God（Parmaatma）

God is the creator of the universe, and the whole world believes in this. There are some people in the world who say that there is no God. Their own organizations, even in small forms, maintain a serious stance on this issue. They have also written some books that clarify their feelings, but still, the feelings toward God in the world are always seen in high spirits (Chardi Kala).

It has been observed in the world that many people who speak against God and also disrespect that feeling appear to be suffering hardship in some form or another. Because of this, we should never speak against God.

God cannot be bought from the market or with any amount of money or material thing. God can only be attained through your true feeling, devotion, love, and through the rules for attaining God. God cannot be attained through threads, amulets, charms, superstitions, ghosts, or witches; He can only become your friend through love.

Many people propagate the message of God. This is a very pure and supreme task. In this task, the Christian faith is at the forefront, and they have a very excellent way of propagation. They hold the number one position in the world in this regard.

In the court of God, everything is settled with absolute truth, because all your actions and reports are recorded according to the rules in God's records, and you receive the reward or punishment according to your deeds.

It is also said that God resides in every particle, and therefore, it is our duty to keep every particle of our country clean (pure/upright).

Exercise

Exercise is very essential for making the body healthy. The kind of exercise you do depends on the kind of physique you desire. There are specific rules for exercising, and by following those rules, you can reach the condition that you wish for.

A wrestler generally exercises twice a day—morning and evening—and some wrestlers keep exercising for eight hours a day, and some even more. Some are runners; they follow their own specific rules. And some are players of games like chess or similar activities; they don't need to do weightlifting. My point is that the type of exercise varies according to one's occupation or goal, and a body without exercise cannot be like that of someone who exercises.

There is a need to learn how to exercise, because experienced trainers (ustaads) have a lot of knowledge, and they can tell you the correct method. Also, nutrition is essential for you after exercise. If you do not eat properly, your exercise will have less effect, and slowly it can do you more harm than good.

Whatever the exercise, you should warm up before starting it. At least 20 minutes should be given to warming up, but I have seen that professional athletes spend one to two hours warming up and are drenched in sweat.

The rules for exercising should be learned well, and by following them, we can contribute to making our body and our country clean (healthy/fit).

The Five K's (Panj Kakaar)

Every religion has some rules, just as in Sikhism, the Five K's are essential. These are Kesh (uncut hair), Kangha (wooden comb), Kirpan (sword/dagger), Kara (steel bracelet), and Kachhera (undershorts).

Kesh (Uncut Hair): This means you should not cut the hair or body hair (rom) on your body. They provide you with energy and an identity. This is the first rule of the Sikhs. There are some very knowledgeable people here who say that hair is given by God and should not be cut, but they consider the Kesgi (the turban) as a Kakaar instead of the hair itself. If my point does not seem right to someone, please forgive me, but I heard this from a very great or knowledgeable Sikh.

Kangha (Wooden Comb): After the hair, the Kangha, which is a small wooden comb, is used to comb the hair twice a day. This massages and cleans the hair. It also helps in the maintenance of the hair. I have a request here: I see many Sikhs whose beards appear very uneven and spread out here and there. I request that while we care for our head hair, it is also necessary that we pay attention to the beard. If we keep it maintained and styled, the look of the Sikh will become even more beautiful. Please do not get angry about this; you, too, must have seen that many people's beards are scattered in one way or another, and they do not maintain them. This is not a good thing.

Kirpan (Sword/Dagger): The Kirpan is a small sword or dagger that Sikhs are allowed to wear after taking Amrit (Sikh initiation). Its meaning is that this is the grace (Kirpa) of the Guru, and this grace requires one to stand against tyranny, fight against it, and protect the poor and the innocent when the need arises, but it should not be misused. Taking off the Kirpan and keeping it separate when traveling on a plane is not right, but a day will surely come when understanding these sentiments will be a matter of respect for everyone.

Kara (Steel Bracelet): The Kara is a bracelet made of Sarbloh (pure iron/steel), worn on the arm, and is a part of the traditions established by the Guru Sahib. Some people also wear it made of other metals, but Sarbloh is commanded. Its meaning is that whenever we do any work with our hands, the Kara, worn by the Guru's grace, reminds us not to touch any wrong work but to always do good deeds.

Kachhera (Undershorts): The next is the Kachhera, which is mostly made of white cloth. It is usually long and large, generally up to the knees or below the knees. Its meaning is to protect one's private parts, cover one's nakedness as much as possible, and maintain chastity (Jati), meaning not to engage in sexual intercourse with any woman other than one's own wife.

So, these are the Five K's, which create a very high quality of life for a person. A high-quality life can create an upright country.

Chulla Chauka (Hearth and Kitchen Area)

Eating and drinking, which is also called food (bhojan) or by many other names, is very essential for every human being. Food usually has to be cooked for humans, but consuming raw food is also observed to a considerable extent among other creatures.

Food is cooked on a hearth (chulla), and we have seen different types of hearths up until today. In ancient times, the hearth was made of clay, fixed in one place in the courtyard. After this, came the portable hearth (chakkma chulla), which could be picked up and placed anywhere. It also acquired names like tandur (oven), bhatthi (furnace), and some other names. After this, the hearth started being made of iron, and now that hearth usually runs on gas or electricity.

The pace of time has increased the conveniences, but it is often heard from people that the pleasure that came with the clay hearth is not the same with the gas or electric stove.

In the clay hearth, milk was placed in a large pot (kaarhni), and with the gentle, slow heat of warm cow dung cakes (paathian), the milk would thicken, and a layer of cream (malai) would form on top. Drinking this milk granted such strength and health that nothing could compare, but time has changed these things.

The kitchen area (chulla chauka) was kept clean by the women by plastering it with mud/cow dung, and it also looked beautiful. Special attention was paid to its cleanliness. Cleaning it after eating and drinking was a sign of a clean India that could be seen here.

Furniture and Doors

Every house definitely has some furniture, and when buying furniture, we need to check its material to ensure that good material has been used. Furniture built by a good craftsman always manages many of your tasks well. Bad furniture will not last long; sometimes it breaks or gets ruined.

Furniture includes all the items used in the house, such as sofas, chairs, beds, dressing tables, cupboards, and along with these, the doors and ventilators (roshandaan) that are installed in the house. While wooden items were made earlier, now they have changed somewhat and are also made of steel or some other metals.

You cannot change furniture all the time, so choose it well. It's okay if you are delayed, but before making the purchase, consult with other family members and stick to what is suitable and best for you.

After purchase, its care is also essential. Sometimes you see children playing by jumping on beds, sofas, or chairs. This damages the furniture, and furniture needs care. If the other related rules are followed, the furniture can fulfill your purpose for a long time.

Do not buy furniture just because it looks cheap. Even if it costs a little more, if it is beautiful and durable, it will repay its value and not cause you any headache. If the home is good, the country will appear clean (well-maintained).

Food

Food is very essential for human life, and life moves forward with it. Generally, there are two types of food in the world: non-vegetarian (maasaahaari) and vegetarian (shaakaahaari). More people in the world are non-vegetarian, but some people in India are vegetarian.

The virtues of vegetarian food are often highlighted, but non-vegetarian people reject the arguments of others, believing non-vegetarian food to be superior. Well, it is everyone's own choice; a person can do as they please. But if you look at this seriously, non-vegetarian food is made by cutting and killing any living being and eating it. If you witness once how beings are slaughtered, you might change your decision.

Some non-vegetarians tell vegetarians that there is life in every grain and give various examples. Well, it doesn't matter; there is no benefit in debating this. A person can eat what they like, but vegetarian food lacks nothing in any aspect, and it also aids in proper digestion. Vegetarian food includes vegetables, various kinds of lentils, and much more, but no meat.

This servant (the author) has been vegetarian since 1978, and I have not felt any deficiency in my body—the kind of deficiency I hear about which suggests that the body remains healthy only by eating meat. I always consider myself stronger and healthier than many meat-eaters.

Anyway, eat what is good, but to make the country clean (healthy), eat good food.

Reading and Writing

Reading and writing are very essential for life. Without them, gaining knowledge is almost impossible. This talk of knowledge is also written in the Vedas and Shastras, and a person should strengthen their resolve to follow it.

In many countries, people who are backward keep themselves, their families, and their children away from education. There is still a large number of illiterate people in the world who do not even know how to sign their names.

Time has changed, and it is hoped that in the coming time, the children of those people who do not want to study will definitely take steps towards education.

The increase in knowledge that you can gain from education cannot be obtained by wandering in jungles, sitting here and there and listening to conversations, or staying engaged in work day and night. Therefore, if you pursue education, you can also write a great deal in your life.

The progress of any country depends on its educated people. We should get good literature and good books. Sometimes books are expensive, and you can get them for free to read from various libraries, or some institutions also distribute books for free.

Therefore, reading and writing are very necessary. Do not think in life that now that you have studied and written something, you do not need more knowledge. Knowledge is an ocean, and the deeper you can go, the more beneficial it is for you.

Only an educated person can create a good policy and work to make the country clean (upright and prosperous).

Hobby

To run a human's life, there are relationships, food, work, some entertainment, and some hobbies. Every person has some intention, thinking, "I want to do this; this is my hobby." This is not a bad thing, but the hobby should be good.

If someone's hobby is to consume intoxicants, if someone's hobby is to commit theft, robbery, or cause fights and quarrels—these are not good hobbies.

Cultivate hobbies that benefit you, your family, your community, and your country, and that elevate the name of your parents and family. Hobbies like reading books, adopting the religious path, exercising, doing charitable work, giving good advice to others, spending some time with elders, and speaking sweetly to everyone—all these hobbies or virtues can elevate your life and your status.

Some people have the hobby of "no money in the pocket, but still acting like a king" (literally: Palle nahin dhela te kar di mela mela). They cultivate hobbies that bring no profit but certainly make their heart happy, such as the hobby of keeping pigeons, keeping some dangerous animals, or keeping fighting cocks. These are quite common hobbies today, and they only bring joy to your own mind. Well, these are not very bad hobbies; you can even turn them into a business. If you have the means, you can do this work.

Keep hobbies that earn you praise. If you are praised, your country is praised. If the country is praised, the country will become clean (upright and prosperous). This is my only plea.

Property / Assets

From ancient times, humans have worked day and night, and through their labor, they create possessions. Farmers build fields, some people create properties, some people build factories, and some start businesses that are valuable and profitable. These are generally called businesses or assets/property (Jaidaad).

Creating assets is not a bad thing, but create assets that are the result of your honest, hard-earned money (literally: blood and sweat). Some people create assets by robbing and plundering others, but religious scriptures say that such assets one day become a great punishment and surface, and then one has to suffer immense sorrow.

This does happen. I will not write a man's name, but he had created property in every village in Punjab, and he continued to acquire property through plunder and by colluding with officials. Eventually, he died, and even before his death, the land he had was sold off. Now, he has no house of his own, not even an inch of space in the village. Even though he was quite good to the village, the punishment these actions brought upon him has practically erased his name and mark.

In matters of property, do not trust anyone, and proceed with great caution, as anyone can make a claim on your property. In matters of property, always keep your paperwork complete so that you do not face any trouble in the future.

Assets will not go with you. Only the property acquired through honest labor (dassan nauhan di kirat kamaai—earning with ten fingernails) and by keeping the Guru Sahib present and visible (as a moral witness) can secure the future for your coming family. And actions done with dishonesty will surely punish you one day. Rightful assets and rightful thoughts are the only things that can make a country pure (upright).

Tourism / Travel

Tourism means roaming, traveling, and enjoying life, which is very essential in life. Some people work all their lives—from work to home, and home to work—but they never take a trip in their life to truly experience it.

This is a rule of Western people (Gore Lok) that whenever they get long holidays during the year, they take a big trip, and even during short breaks, they definitely go somewhere for one, two, three, or four days. It is also said that they claim they return fully relaxed.

However, the thinking of the people of some of our countries remains tied up with other preoccupations or worries. Even if they go on holiday, they cannot enjoy their holidays in the way Westerners do, as they constantly worry about the past.

Travel brings freshness to your life, and if you have the means, you should travel according to your financial capacity. If it's not a very expensive trip, then for people in India, if they simply go out to the mountains for a day, see the environment there, and return home in the evening, they will feel a good sense of refreshment within themselves. If you go out somewhere far, which is within your means, and return after two or four days, you will feel very good.

Therefore, travel is necessary, and in many places, it is very enjoyable. We went to Manikaran, and seeing the sights along the way is very joyful. Such places feel like we are not on Earth but traveling in some other world. However, I found the route to be very dangerous.

Initially, my idea was that whenever I got a chance, I would take the children to show them that place, but after seeing the dangerous roads, I have now changed my decision. Even though people travel there every day, if your mind makes a decision, it is good to accept it.

The country with the greatest number of good travel destinations is a clean (prosperous/attractive) country.

The Value of Time

The value of time is immense. Just as water that has passed once never returns, so is time. This idea is quite easy to understand and is very essential, but some people do not understand it, and they also do not realize the harm they suffer.

We all need to complete our tasks on time so that we or our work do not fall behind, and then trying to catch up from behind becomes almost impossible or very difficult. The losses that occur due to this can sometimes cause great damage to your life.

Understanding the rules and value of time, millions, billions, and trillions of entities with greater stature than us—the moon, sun, stars, Earth, rivers, streams, oceans, and many other beings—do not fall behind their schedule. Yet, humans, in my opinion, are the creature that falls behind the most.

Nature has taught humanity a lot about the value of time, and those who have understood it have received great happiness.

I know many people who, instead of recognizing the value of time, either keep sleeping, keep taking drugs, keep thinking bad thoughts, or do not work out of fear of work. Just pause and consider whose loss this is.

I believe that in schools, colleges, and universities, there should definitely be a dedicated hour or half-hour of study on this topic, perhaps once a month or every three months. And if the students come home and teach this to their families, just see how those who keep pace with time automatically make themselves and their country clean (upright/disciplined).

The Path of Truth

There are two main paths in the world: one is the path of truth, and the other is the path of falsehood (lies). Occasionally, similar topics may appear in the book, but there will definitely be a slight difference in their knowledge and information. Therefore, readers should not take offense at this.

The path of truth can give you an auspicious life. But how sensible is it to always deceive yourself and the people connected to you by adopting the path of falsehood?

The path of truth receives honor in the court of the Eternal Being (Akaal Purakh), while falsehood suffers sorrow according to its deeds. The courts of the world also try to uphold the truth, but in the court of God, the path that leads there, truth and falsehood are completely visible.

Teach children to speak the truth from childhood so that in the coming time, they can walk the path of truth, make their lives pure (upright), and become citizens of a clean (upright) country.

Exaggerating/Telling Tall Tales

The world is strange; all sorts of human beings are born here, and their habits are varied. Where there are people who speak the truth and what is correct, there are also those who lie and exaggerate (gapp maarne).

A person who exaggerates cannot remain hidden for too long, and their impact on people is simply that of a fibber. People then stop believing their stories. Sometimes, such people become so addicted to exaggerating that they cannot live without spinning a yarn. Even if they gain no benefit from it, they still do not quit the habit.

There is a saying: "Exaggeration is the poor man's veil." A little harmless exaggeration has to be done out of compulsion, but poor people do not cause such great harm to anyone with it; it becomes their compulsion.

A person who exaggerates sometimes harms others by their exaggerations and also goes home with empty pockets themselves. Sometimes, people who exaggerate even ruin the homes of others.

The right thing to do is to quit such a habit. The family members of those who are addicted to exaggerating should counsel them and take a promise from them to walk the path of truth; only then can the country become clean (upright).

Pocket or Wallet

There is a need to keep essential items safe in society, and for this, a pocket, a wallet (batua), or some other means is created. These usually have a similar form to a wallet or purse, but their names change due to larger sizes.

Some people create a secret place in their pocket and keep their wallet there; this is a good thing as it provides safety. However, some people put their wallet in their front pocket or the back pocket of their pants, leaving half of it hanging out, which carries a very high risk of loss.

Always keep your wallet in mind and protect yourself from pickpockets. If you have a large amount of money that doesn't fit in your wallet, sew a pocket inside your shirt, under your armpit, or inside your vest, or inside your kachha (undershorts) in your pants. This provides considerable safety, but you still need to pay attention while traveling.

Always keep in your mind that your wallet is in your pocket. If you stop paying attention, pickpockets will show off their skill. You should put your wallet only in the inner pockets of your coat. If you are wearing a kurta pajama, putting the wallet in the kurta's pocket is quite risky; it can be easily taken out from there.

Do not keep very valuable items in your wallet, as a snatcher or pickpocket might target you. If you are an NRI (Non-Resident Indian), you need even more caution, as you are easily identified among the general public, and NRIs are often the most robbed.

If an incident occurs, be sure to inform the police, but always keep yourself vigilant; only then can a clean India be built.

Preserving Documents

Every person has some documents that require great care. Some people are quite serious about this task, but some people are negligent. Due to a lack of knowledge on how to preserve documents, or due to carelessness, their papers get misplaced or lost, which results in great harm.

So, the good thing is to create a file. You can buy such files from the market and place your documents in that file. Write an index (tatkara) at the front of every file, detailing which document is at which number, so that when you need to find a paper quickly, you can locate it instantly.

Before signing any document, look at and understand it thoroughly before you sign it. Do not give your documents to anyone else to look after; this could result in a loss for you at any time.

If you receive official or business-related documents, you need a certain level of knowledge to manage those papers—knowledge that understands business. Here, you will have to create files according to the rules, and the file numbers and indices can make it easy for you to understand the work.

You can create a place in your house, small or large, according to your documents, where your papers can be stored safely. If necessary, lock your documents away so that no other person can steal your papers or information, causing you harm and benefiting themselves. Developing such a habit can benefit you and help make the country clean (disciplined).

Fraudulent Gurus

Especially in Hindustan (India), the markets are filled with fraudulent gurus (dhongi babe). In earlier times, when complaints of ghosts, spirits, or spiritual disturbances occurred, some devoted individuals (Bhagat) or knowledgeable people in every village or surrounding area would work to resolve these issues, but they never took money.

In our village, there was a man we called Baba Daulati, or his disciple (Chela); he even carried a pair of tongs (chimta). If there was ever such a complaint and someone took him to their home, he would definitely fix something. But his first condition was that he couldn't even drink a sip of water from that house. Throughout his entire life, whenever someone needed him, he offered free service and never took a single aana (coin) from anyone.

Today, especially in Punjab, the camps of these babas (gurus) have sprung up in almost every village. There is some small baba in every village, and within a five-kilometer radius, there is also a large camp owner who receives many followers. He tricks people by performing various stunts (dhokanj).

Now, moreover, Hindi-speaking people from outside Punjab have arrived and set up large establishments in Punjab. Their experience is such that people flock to them in droves after reading their advertisements in the newspapers. They trap people in such a way that their monthly income is greater than that of the President or the Prime Minister.

When someone's work is stalled, that person worries about their work all day long and keeps trying to get it done. But when the work is done, the thought comes into their mind that "this baba fixed my problem," so their devotion increases, and they take four more people to that baba.

These are all fraudulent babas, and it is necessary to save oneself from their clutches; only then can we build a clean (morally upright) country.

Relationships, Parents

Not only in our country but all over the world, relationships and parents are common to everyone. There are rules for upholding these relationships, which everyone generally tries to follow. However, what we see today in India and among Indian-origin people in Europe is that these relationships with their children are on their last breath.

I have seen a lot that usually, when children find a life partner—a boy or a girl—they consider the relationship with their parents an added burden and generally, one day, they choke the life out of the relationship and end it.

I am also writing a separate book on this, but it is a very sad thing that some children treat their parents with more disrespect than enemies. They beat, hit, and sometimes even murder them.

Generally, the customs of Westerners (Gore) are not like this. Western parents do not pay much attention to what their children do or do not do, and children also sometimes forget their parents.

Just recently, in the family of one of my acquaintances, a relative who used to visit passed away. He had two sons, or perhaps one daughter. They were informed that their father had died. They said they had no involvement (no interest in the matter), and they neither came for the funeral rites nor had they ever come to meet him before.

So, this path has also started in our society. I have seen some worthless people from foreign countries who do not mourn the death of their parents, siblings, or other close relatives.

The good thing is to create a good society; only then can we make our country healthy (morally sound). The relationships with parents are very precious, and there is nothing above them. I cannot write more than this. In some places, parents are even given the status of God.

Dowry (Daaj Dahej)

There are some customs in India that do not exist in other countries, and if they do exist somewhere, their form is somewhat different. In India and some countries, there is a custom of dowry (daaj dahej). This means that when a girl gets married, her parents give her some items, money, gold, etc., and send her to her in-laws' house.

This custom was initially simple, as the daughter was leaving home and would need these items at her in-laws' place. Then, this custom evolved in such a way that the groom's side started forcefully demanding dowry from the bride's family, and it grew to become a very wrong practice, which has led to very bad consequences.

Out of greed, the boy's side sometimes demands so much from the girl's family that they cannot give it, and this has led to fights and quarrels, separations, and atrocities against the girls.

All these things happen in some other countries as well, but perhaps they are more prevalent in India. This practice causes great harm and must be stopped. The laws that have been made against these wrongful customs need to be taken seriously, and there is a need to keep those laws alive. If we succeed in this, the realization of a Clean India will take less time.

Medicines

In earlier times, people worked hard, ate simple and plain food, and they certainly used to sweat while working. But as time has brought many changes, the general level of hard work has decreased for people today, and less sweat is produced during work than before. Consequently, diets have also changed from before, the result of which is that people are falling victim to more diseases.

In earlier times, diseases were fewer—the reason for which I have already written above. If someone was slightly sick, they would generally be treated and cured by being given some minor hot or cold home remedy.

Now, due to changes from earlier times, change in diet, and less hard work, the increase in diseases has led to a great increase in the number of medicines and factories opening up.

Well, according to the circumstances, medicine is needed for illness. But it must also be said here that among these, many people fill their pockets by giving medicine that is not for the ailment. And the quack doctors (jhola chhap doctors) have opened small clinics in the streets and neighborhoods of the cities, doing less good and more harm to the people.

Many medicines are manufactured in our country, and a great number of medicines are exported to countries around the world at a very low price. The country that has good medicines can always become healthy and clean (upright).

Helping Others

Where there is sorrow in the world, there is also happiness, and if there is joy, there is also grief. When humans share these things with one another, relationships become stronger, and humanity becomes powerful.

India is a country that has progressed greatly, and today, India has advanced significantly in helping other nations as well. Any country that extends one hand toward India finds India extending both hands back, becoming its friend.

I believe there are still many countries that could benefit greatly by joining hands with India. I do not know why those countries have not advanced much, but a large quantity of goods from India are exported to them. I hope that if any country calls out for help, India will always assist that nation.

Especially among Sikhs, the feeling of helping is found to be number one in the whole world. Whenever tragedies occur, or calamities strike within India, people from Punjab provide all kinds of help. And if a calamity strikes in Punjab, every Punjabi helps even beyond their means.

The Punjabi organization Khalsa Aid is very advanced in providing aid all over the world. They do not help only Punjabis; if there is a tragedy in any country in the world, they reach there and provide all kinds of help.

Everyone should cultivate such a mindset because helping others is an act of charity (Paropkar). Doing so can make any country clean (morally upright/benevolent).

Consuming Drugs/Intoxicants

Consuming drugs/intoxicants is a very bad thing. Wherever people consume drugs, they ruin themselves, they ruin their families, and they push their village, their country, and the entire world toward bad times. Finally, they themselves fall into bad times and are destroyed. Drug consumption is completely wrong.

However, some people maximize their earnings by selling drugs. Drug money will one day become your enemy, and the end of all those people who have engaged in this business is generally very bad.

The boys who consume drugs need to become very serious, understand the consequences, and quit the habit. When one hears or reads the innermost feelings of the mothers or fathers of some of these boys, it causes extreme sorrow, because drug users not only ruin themselves but also destroy their families, and many have even been punished for killing their parents or anyone else who came in their way.

I am going to present my book, Drug-Free Punjab (Nasha Mukt Punjab), to the Punjab Government and the Government of India. If they accept this book and consider its contents, it can be a good start.

Drugs will always destroy you. While they might give a little temporary pleasure, by staying away from intoxicants, you can live a good life and understand true joy. Making yourself stand on your own feet, understanding life, and staying away from intoxicants is what can build a clean (upright) country.

Traffic of All Kinds

Traffic is the name given to the movement of vehicles and other means of transport on the roads. If traffic moves according to rules, many accidents are prevented. However, there are some countries where there are traffic rules, but the people there adhere to them very little or lack understanding.

I have traveled to and observed about 50 countries. In Asian countries, traffic rules are flouted, but in Europe and many other countries, traffic rules are respected. Accidents do happen in these countries because sometimes some people fail to follow the rules and become responsible for causing accidents.

Just recently in America, a Punjabi Sardar took a wrong U-turn in a truck and killed all three people of one family. Many similar incidents happen.

An effort should be made for the administration to enforce the law strictly regarding traffic. Forgive a mistake once, impose a fine the second time, a heavy fine the third time, and for the fourth time, suspend the license of the rule-breaker for some time or permanently, depending on the circumstances. This makes a person understand that they have made a mistake and that they have caused harm to themselves, and who knows how many others they have harmed or could have harmed.

In some countries, even if you make a mistake in traffic, the police will take some money and let you off from the fine or ticket. This is very wrong, but it does not happen in European countries.

Those who drive without learning the rules and without a license should get a license by learning the rules. And when such people are caught, the police should impose such a heavy fine on them that they never make such a mistake again and also tell their companions not to drive without a license.

In 1977, I saw in Iran that when vehicles were wrecked in an accident on a motorway or GT Road, they would build a small platform and place them there, so that people passing by could see how the car was destroyed due to the accident, and who knows what other harm was caused there.

If discipline is maintained in traffic, any country can become clean (orderly and safe).

Rivers, Canals, and Oceans

Our country has thousands of rivers, canals, and also large oceans, which provide our nation with a great deal of energy, income, and conveniences. Due to some shortcomings or the inability to create good programs, various kinds of damage also occur here, but the situation can be corrected in the coming time by formulating a good scheme.

Whenever any issue comes up and I speak to someone, I sometimes cannot help but mention that "I have written a book on this topic." But I am afraid that someone might misunderstand and think that "S. Davinder Singh has written a book on every subject." Yes, I have evidence for this, and if God wills, in 2026, I am trying to get these works accepted by the governments—that these books are benevolent and that they should be accepted to do good for the world.

Regarding rivers, oceans, and canals, I have such programs that great productivity can be achieved from them, and the country can be made clean (prosperous).

I hope that if the administration becomes serious about this, we can transform the shape and appearance of these natural resources, or those we have created ourselves, in such a way that the world will exclaim, "Wow! There is no such healthy country anywhere in the world!"

Machinery

India has broken records in progress over the last 30–35 years, and in terms of machinery, India is keeping pace with China. The engineers and craftsmen here are doing a truly marvelous job in manufacturing all kinds of machinery.

I believe that even though India is doing excellent work in machinery manufacturing, if it pays a little attention to China, looks at the machines they build, and succeeds in creating even better machines, India could become number one in the world for machinery. China's engineers and artisans build such machines that the world cannot even imagine where they get this intellect.

The machinery manufactured in our country is very cheap, and in contrast, machinery manufactured in foreign countries is 10 to 50 times more expensive. India is also advancing significantly in exporting goods to other countries around the world, and it is hoped that in the coming time, it will plant its flags and perhaps even reach the number one spot.

Indians are sometimes negligent or dishonest. When they have to show or manufacture a product, they use poor quality material, which benefits them but results in a loss for the buyers. Sometimes, a buyer refuses to take the entire shipment, which could be worth millions of rupees. In this regard, the Chinese are very good; they work with great honesty, hard work, and truthfulness.

Indians need to make a slight change, and I believe that they will soon accept my request and build a healthy (upright/quality-focused) India.

Rogues and Vagrants

In every country, there are rogues, vagrants, very good people, players, engineers, religious devotees, idlers, educated people—all kinds of people exist.

The good people will continue to produce good results, but the rogues and vagrants, being slaves to their habits or due to misconceptions, ruin themselves and also cause harm to their families, friends, and the country.

Regarding such people, the administration, institutions, and families must become serious, and they should be removed from this bad habit. Every evil deed falls under the category of a bad habit. If I were to name them, I have already written about them in some form in this book.

These people need to change their nature. I have seen that both in India and abroad, wherever there are bad people or those engaged in bad businesses, they eventually get caught in the clutches of the law. The result of that is bound to be bad.

Here abroad, some people, due to their bad deeds, have so disgraced themselves and their daughters, sisters, and mothers in India that it is better to die than commit such hooliganism.

Hooliganism is a form of addiction and a misconception. Until today, almost no one has been able to build a good standing in society with it, and the biggest rogues eventually face bad consequences or are killed. So, there is no benefit in this, but they do not understand this. I have also written a book on this—and I apologize again for mentioning this book—in that book, I mentioned that I want to sit and talk with those people. They could be my siblings, elders, or children, and because they are my own, I worry about them.

If your future could be made, I wouldn't stop you, but your future is ruined, and so is that of your companions. Therefore, we must make our future bright. Let bygones be bygones. Now, we must become good and make our country healthy (morally sound) too.

Pollution

Pollution generally refers to the smoke emitted from traffic, cars, motorcycles, and other vehicles, and the effect caused by the consumption of fuel is a form of pollution. This greatly harms the air we breathe, diseases spread, and it results only in loss for us.

All countries around the world are serious about pollution, but some poor countries do not have much concern for this pollution. In our country, the entry of vehicles that pose a risk of pollution is banned in Delhi and some other big cities. Specifically, in Delhi, there is a ban on diesel vehicles that are older than 10 years.

There is a similar law in European countries, which they have established over the last eight to ten years. Before entering every city here, they have signs posted that say which vehicles are not allowed to enter that area. Since their cameras and other systems are very robust, if someone makes a mistake, they are caught and face a heavy fine. But people here generally do not make this mistake.

Pollution is also caused by factories, and there are other sources of pollution. The administration should seriously consider these, find a solution, and always remain serious about making its country healthy (clean/safe).

Disabled People

In every country, there are some people who are disabled (apahaj). Some are disabled from childhood, and others face such hardship due to accidents, illnesses, or other unfortunate events.

In Europe and other affluent countries, the administration has created many conveniences for such people, and they provide every facility to those who have such impairments. While they may experience some physical discomfort due to their incomplete bodies, the availability of facilities ensures that they face fewer hardships in life compared to what is seen in some other countries.

In our India, although the administration is very serious, there are so many people in such disabled conditions that one is moved to pray to God, "May this not happen to anyone."

The sad thing is that there are very few arrangements for the care of such people there. Even where arrangements exist, some of these people turn begging into a profession and do not care about the administration.

I have seen some disabled people, and some generous and kind individuals have offered to pay for their treatment, but they refuse treatment because, for the sake of the income they are currently earning (from begging), they do not want to be cured.

Well, I believe this problem can also be solved, and I have already written a book on how to solve the problem of beggars. I hope that our country and other nations will definitely become serious and pay attention to caring for such people, as it will help make the country clean (compassionate and upright).

Stopping Disrespect

In every country, the people have a very great faith in their religious scriptures, and they consider them the closest path to meeting God. This is true, and people should increase their devotion to their own religious scriptures and also respect the religious scriptures of others.

The religious scripture of the Sikh faith is Sri Guru Granth Sahib, and it is the most priceless and valuable thing for Sikhs. Sikhs respect it more than their own lives and cannot bear to see its desecration, nor can they tolerate the disrespect of other religious scriptures.

For some time now, some followers of a certain guru in Haryana named Ram Rahim, and he himself, have committed sacrilege of the Sikh religious scriptures and rituals. Some of his followers tore the respected pages (patre) of the Sri Guru Granth Sahib and threw them in the streets, and they also put up posters saying they had done this.

Following this, some other such incidents occurred. Some people were arrested and imprisoned, but this activity is still continuing. Sikhs find this a very painful matter—that anyone should disrespect their scriptures or those of others in this way. As a result, some people have even been murdered by Sikhs.

It is common for some people to go into a Gurdwara and desecrate the Sri Guru Granth Sahib. They are caught, and sometimes attempts are made to cover up for them by claiming they are mentally unstable.

The administration and the people should strive to stop all this, and the respect for religious scriptures and other religions should always remain intact. Only then can a Clean India be built.

The Race to Come Abroad

Like other countries in the world, India is also a runner in the race to come abroad. This custom, or this obsession, particularly dominates the people of Punjab and Punjabis wherever they reside. People from Punjab are taking huge risks and rushing toward foreign countries, a pursuit in which thousands of people have already lost their lives to date.

Listening to the stories of millions of people makes one's heart weep at the hardships they have had to face in this race. Similar opinions from other people are also heard on YouTube.

Punjabi people from India are willing to adopt any means or methods that those who offer to send them abroad suggest. For this endeavor, many people have sold all their land, property, homes, and valuable jewelry. Those who are unsuccessful and cannot earn an income find their lives completely ruined, and many have even ended their own lives due to this tragedy.

Many people are wandering lost after coming abroad because they cannot find work. But the sad thing is that if you tell or explain the foreign reality to these people who want to come abroad, they will call you bad, saying that you are trying to stop them.

My request is that whoever wants to come abroad should do so legally and correctly. Coming here on 'donkey flights' (illegal crossings) or putting one's life in danger is wrong in every way.

Just last week, perhaps on October 2nd or 3rd, 2025, I heard that about 80 people were traveling to England in a boat. The boat sank, and many people drowned and died. Similarly, in many other countries, millions of people have lost their lives to date doing such things. And girls engaging in these activities are also robbed of their honor by the agents (donkeys). After arriving abroad, because they cannot find work, they have to endure great disrespect. They are the honor of our homes, but now everyone wants to come abroad and throw themselves into a situation that is not easy, and they are not willing to listen to anyone.

This step (of coming abroad) must be taken very thoughtfully.

Employment

Employment is a very important part or component of life. No one's life can run without employment, and every creature in the world is employed in some form, although we mostly do not understand how other creatures are employed.

We should engage in employment that allows us to earn honest wealth. Earnings made through any wrong occupation can never be a source of happiness.

Some people are employed, but the owners do not pay them the worth of their hard work (literally: blood and sweat). And by withholding that money, although they may not hear the voice of the poor and suffering, God surely hears it and sends suffering to those who claim a right over someone else's employment earnings.

Every country needs to be very serious about employment, and the country that takes it as its duty to generate employment will surely see progress in all circumstances.

Teach your children to think in the future that employment is essential for us. The life of one who has employment becomes happy and easy. Some people have employment but are not very concerned, and they make excuses and keep sleeping instead of working.

For good employment, you need a good education, and in foreign countries, especially, those who have good employment have very high salaries.

In Punjab, migrants from other states have virtually taken over employment. Due to the slightly better economic condition of Punjabis, they themselves do not like to work, and this is going to become a problem in the coming time. I apologize again (for mentioning my book); I have already written a book on this topic, titled How to Solve the Migrant Problem.

Everyone must join together to build a clean India. Whether someone is a migrant or a native, the country is one for all.

Registration of All People

India has made great progress and is now understanding and successfully adopting modern methods. One very essential point is that although our country understands all matters and has an excellent Constitution, many things are still learned by countries observing one another.

Our country is ahead of China in population numbers in 2025. Although technical registration is ongoing here, it is still very weak. The registration of every person, including the Aadhaar card, should be done with strictness and truthfulness.

Absolutely, I know people who have more than one Aadhaar card, especially the migrants who live in Punjab. They have an Aadhaar card from their home state, and they also have more than one Aadhaar card with different names in Punjab.

There is a need to pay attention to this. A truthful registration and complete record of a person—their full details—can bind the country within a rule and lead it forward in progress. Only then will our country become clean (disciplined and well-governed).

Tax and Income

The economic condition of any country depends on its income and expenditure. Due to the lack of registration, or incorrect registration, of all people living in India, no one truly knows the correct information regarding tax and income here.

If the situation in India were to become like that of European countries, the conditions in India could see great progress. It is true that doing this all at once is impossible, but on the other hand, if you look at India, it is many hundred times larger than my country, Holland, yet it is very far behind in terms of economic conditions. This causes me great sorrow.

The tax system in India should be started by explaining it to the people and by adopting some practices from European countries. If the government starts spending the tax revenue on the people, as is done here (in Europe), the country can advance significantly, because India has very vast resources; only the system needs to be fixed.

Every person needs to pay tax, and there is a need to create rules with concern, taking the current financial circumstances into account, on how we can increase our income. You will find more thoughts on this matter in the book, with which we can make our country clean (economically transparent and prosperous).

The Problem of Dogs and Stray Animals

Well, let no subject go untouched—I have already written a book about stray dogs and stray animals too. This problem is quite a big issue in India. I have seen dozens of animals sitting among trees in cities, and sometimes even in villages. Cows are generally the most common.

I have seen clips on YouTube that show how stray bulls and cows wander around, causing accidents, injuring, causing damage, and breaking things. The same is true for dogs and other animals.

What I have written in the book is that we can turn these stray animals into very valuable animals. But how? I cannot explain that in this book, but if you read my book, you will surely say that it is a good book. What the administration does now will be known after my meeting with them.

It is essential to solve this problem. It is a very sad thing that in October 2025, the great Punjabi singer Rajvir Jawanda died because of these stray animals. I am also writing a separate book about this.

We should not do anything that causes distress to any animal, but we must resolve this issue. Only then will a healthy India be built.

Roads and Trees

What is the benefit of planting trees along roads, how and which trees should be planted, and what else needs to be done? Now you will say, "Has he written anything about this?" Yes, my book is definitely about this too, and the book is such that Hindustan can be made like heaven if someone listens to me. What more could there be than this?

Many roads in Hindustan have become very good. About 30-35 years ago, I traveled from Delhi to Rajasthan, and that road was so good that it rivaled the roads of Europe. The GT Roads from Delhi to Amritsar have been built very well. And the administration also has a very good vision for the roads going to the villages. There are good roads in Gujarat too, and people are slowly learning the rules, but there is still a lot of work to be done.

A rule needs to be made regarding the planting of trees alongside the roads—which trees should be planted, ones that can give benefit and profit. I have that scheme. Trees are just trees, but if trees are planted along one kilometer (1,000 meters)—and I believe around 200 trees can be planted in one kilometer—and if one tree can earn you ₹5,000 to ₹10,000 annually, then at the rate of ₹10,000 annually, you can get ₹20 lakh from one kilometer. Just imagine how much the country would benefit from 100 kilometers.

Please calculate it a little and consider my point. I am mentioning this specifically in the book I am writing about Modi Sahib. Even if my book is accepted by him—I know he has a lot of work and may not be able to read it—but if he happens to read this particular point within the book, I believe Hindustan would become the richest country in the world, just by planting trees along the roads. And Hindustan will become a great and clean (green/prosperous) country.

19. Hind Di Chaadar (The Mantle of India - Historical/Religious)
20. You Can Become Kings + Approximately 250 more books.

With love, respect, and humility, I submit this request: I have written over 260–270 books in total by 2025, and this process is still ongoing. You can read the list of books on our website, and many such books are not yet included in this list.

My only wish and prayer is that the administration considers any book that is beneficial for the welfare of society and humanity, and that knowledge be showered upon the people by bringing that book to them in some way, so that our country may be purified (upright).

I have deliberately selected and listed these 20 specific book titles from my full list and included them in this book. This is so that if this book reaches the Prime Minister Sahib, he may know how excellent the books listed above can be for the country. If he gives me the responsibility for these books, or if they can be published in different languages by his concerned departments and brought to use, my life will be successful.

For me, there is nothing greater than this—that even after living outside the country for nearly half a century, I have remained connected with my country and how concerned I am. My country, my motherland, has given respect to my service. I have high hopes that my service will be accepted.

When a person writes something, it is their own perspective, and no one is ever 100% in agreement with their thoughts. If anything has been written in this for which any administration official or PM Sahib does not agree, it can be modified before publication, or if there are any other commands, they can be added to the book.

Please forgive any mistakes or errors.

With gratitude, S. Davinder Singh Thamanwal, Holland.

SWACHH BHARAT

THE CLEAN INDIA REVOLUTION

In the spirit of collective action and unwavering dedication, the Swachh Bharat Abhiyan has ignited a nationwide transformation, proving that a cleaner, healthier India is within our reach. This movement is a testament to what we can achieve when every hand joins in, committed to fostering an environment of hygiene, dignity, and pride. Let us continue to be the change, ensuring a brighter, cleaner future for generations to come.
